Chapter 12: वीराङ्गना पन्नाधाया (Panna Dhai, the Brave)

Paper 4 — (progressively harder)

Subject	Sanskrit (NCERT Class 7, Deepakam)
Chapter	12 — वीराङ्गना पन्नाधाया (Panna Dhai, the Brave)
Total Questions	60 (Multiple Choice, single correct)
Maximum Marks	240
Suggested Time	90 minutes

Marking scheme: +4 for each correct answer · -1 for each wrong answer · 0 if unattempted.

Instructions: Each question has four options (A), (B), (C), (D); exactly one is correct. National-Olympiad traps: the one who DIED was Panna's own son (चन्दन), not Panna and not the prince — Panna survived to mourn, so 'self-sacrifice' is imprecise; the value sacrificed is dearer-than-self (her child), which is why the act outranks ordinary battlefield courage; मारयितुम् (-तुम्) names only the assassin's PURPOSE 'to kill' — it neither asserts success nor identifies who actually died, contrast अमारयत् (past), मारयिष्यति (future), मारयतु (imperative); वीराङ्गना = वीर + अङ्गना with savarṇa-dīrgha sandhi (अ+अ→आ) meaning 'brave woman', not a place/weapon/queen; षोडश is the cardinal 'sixteen' but षोडशम्/षोडशे is the ordinal 'sixteenth', and षोडशे शतके is LOCATIVE 'in the sixteenth century', not षष्ठे ('sixth') nor षष्टि: ('sixty'); छलेन/स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः are instrumental (by-means-of), वीराङ्गनासु is locative-plural (among) — never read them as nominatives; दुष्ट = morally wicked while मूर्ख = intellectually foolish, so the rival's fault is moral not mental; राजगृह is a PLACE (palace) but राजपुत्र a PERSON (prince); सर्वस्वत्याग = giving-up (त्याग) of one's-everything (सर्वस्व), i.e. renunciation, never receiving a reward. Do not write on this paper — mark answers on your answer sheet.

1. A reader argues that the chapter's title वीराङ्गना (rather than वीरः or राज्ञी) is itself a deliberate interpretive claim about Panna. Which inference best captures WHY the author chose वीराङ्गना specifically?

(A) It asserts that her heroism — though shown through a woman's domestic role as nurse, not a warrior's — deserves the same word of valour normally reserved for warriors

(B) It asserts that she literally led an army into battle like a male hero

- (C) It asserts that she was the reigning queen of Mewar and ruled in her own right
(D) It asserts that bravery is impossible for a woman, hence the special term

2. Suppose history had recorded that the assassin saw through the swap and killed BOTH children. How would this counterfactual most change the chapter's central claim?

- (A) Nothing would change, since the story is only about the assassin's wickedness
(B) Panna would then count as the one who made the sacrifice, since her son died either way
(C) Panna's sacrifice would remain genuine, but the prince's survival — the very reason her act mattered to Mewar's future — would be lost, so the story would no longer be one of a kingdom saved
(D) It would prove the swap was a foolish plan with no value at all

3. The chapter distinguishes a प्रसूता (birth-mother) from a धाया (foster-nurse). Why does making Panna a धाया rather than the prince's प्रसूता INTENSIFY, rather than weaken, the moral force of her sacrifice?

- (A) A धाया is paid, so she sacrificed only to keep her wages
(B) A प्रसूता would have refused, so only a धाया could have done it carelessly
(C) It weakens the act, since a nurse owes nothing and so her deed means little
(D) She had no blood tie obliging her to die for the prince, yet she gave her own blood-son's life — so loyalty, not maternal instinct toward the prince, drove the act

4. वीराङ्गना is formed as वीर + अङ्गना. The junction shows which specific sandhi, and what is its rule?

- (A) Savarṇa-dīrgha sandhi: a short अ followed by a short अ fuses into a single long आ
(B) Guṇa sandhi: अ + इ becomes ए
(C) Visarga sandhi: a final ः changes before a vowel
(D) Vṛddhi sandhi: अ + ए becomes ऐ

5. A student claims the assassin 'अमारयत् the prince' (he killed the prince). Two separate errors lie hidden in this single claim. Which option names BOTH correctly?

- (A) Only the verb is wrong; the prince truly was the one killed
(B) The verb is wrong (the text gives मारयितुम्, 'to kill', a purpose, not the past अमारयत्) AND the object is wrong (the one actually killed was Panna's son, not the prince)
(C) Only the object is wrong; अमारयत् is the form the chapter actually uses
(D) Both the verb and object are right; the only error is the spelling of अमारयत्

6. Order these by the CAUSAL chain (each step enabling the next): (P) the prince later reigns over Mewar; (Q) Panna substitutes her son in the royal bed; (R) the rival schemes to kill the heir; (S) the assassin slays the boy he believes to be the prince.

- (A) $R \rightarrow S \rightarrow Q \rightarrow P$ (B) $R \rightarrow Q \rightarrow S \rightarrow P$
(C) $Q \rightarrow R \rightarrow S \rightarrow P$ (D) $R \rightarrow Q \rightarrow P \rightarrow S$

7. The phrase स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः (in golden letters) is grammatically instrumental plural. A student renders it 'the golden letters are remembered.' What is the precise grammatical fault?
- (A) Treating a locative ('in the letters') as an instrumental
(B) Treating a singular as a plural
(C) Treating a verb as a noun
(D) Treating an instrumental ('BY MEANS OF golden letters') as if it were the nominative subject of the sentence
8. Why is calling बनवीर (the rival) मूर्ख (foolish) a worse mischaracterisation than calling him merely an enemy, in light of how his plot is described?
- (A) His plot was deliberately designed and nearly succeeded, so the text marks him दुष्ट (morally wicked) — 'foolish' would wrongly excuse the evil as a mere lapse of intellect
(B) 'Foolish' overpraises him, since a fool could never have devised any plan
(C) It is accurate, because दुष्ट and मूर्ख mean the same in Sanskrit
(D) Calling him an enemy is the real error; मूर्ख is the precise word the chapter uses
9. Consider four claims: (i) Panna died in the prince's place; (ii) Panna's son died in the prince's place; (iii) the prince survived; (iv) the assassin's purpose was to kill the heir. Exactly how many are TRUE, and which are false?
- (A) All four are true
(B) Three are true (ii, iii, iv); only (i) is false, since Panna survived
(C) Two are true (i and iii), the rest false
(D) Only (iv) is true; the others all overstate the story
10. In the sentence frame 'दुष्टबुद्धिः बालकं मारयितुम् असैनिकम् अप्रेषयत्' ('the evil-minded one sent a soldier to kill the boy'), which word does the infinitive मारयितुम् grammatically complete in sense?
- (A) It supplies the purpose of the sending — the soldier was sent in order to kill
(B) It is the main finite verb of the sentence, meaning 'he killed'
(C) It is the subject, naming who did the action
(D) It is an adjective describing बालकम् (the boy)
11. The chapter says Panna acted out of निष्ठा (loyalty/duty). A classmate counters: 'She acted only out of love for a child she had raised.' Which response best preserves the chapter's claim while granting what is true in the objection?
- (A) The classmate is simply right; the chapter never mentions duty at all
(B) Love and duty are the same thing, so the distinction is meaningless
(C) Affection surely existed, but love alone would not demand sacrificing one's OWN child; only loyalty to her duty as धाया can explain choosing the prince's life over her son's
(D) Neither love nor duty mattered; she acted because the king ordered her
12. सर्वस्वत्याग is glossed as renouncing 'one's everything.' For a soldier it might mean his life; for Panna the text makes it her son. What general principle about the word does this contrast reveal?

- (A) सर्वस्व always and only means material wealth, so the chapter misuses it
- (B) सर्वस्व means specifically one's own life, so Panna must have died
- (C) सर्वस्व means a small token, so the comparison with a soldier is exaggerated
- (D) सर्वस्व names whatever is dearest and most complete to a person, so its concrete referent shifts with who is renouncing — for a mother, her child can be her 'everything'

13. Which single revision turns the false sentence 'षष्ठे शतके बनवीरः राजपुत्रम् अमारयत्' into one that is both historically and grammatically faithful to the chapter?

- (A) Keep षष्ठे but change अमारयत् to मारयिष्यति — 'in the sixth century he will kill the prince'
- (B) Keep both words and only add 'इति' at the end
- (C) Change राजपुत्रम् to राजगृहम् but keep षष्ठे and अमारयत्
- (D) षोडशे शतके बनवीरः राजपुत्रं मारयितुम् ऐच्छत् — 'in the sixteenth century Banbir wished to kill the prince'

14. If the rival had openly challenged the king to combat instead of using छल, which TWO descriptors that the chapter applies to him would no longer fit?

- (A) Both 'brave' and 'loyal', which the chapter already applies to him
- (B) Both 'deceitful' (छल-using) and 'cowardly' (striking by stealth rather than face-to-face) would no longer apply
- (C) 'Wicked' and 'evil-minded', which depend only on open combat
- (D) 'Royal' and 'foreign', which describe his fighting style

15. A test bank pairs each word with a contrasting near-homophone. Which pairing correctly identifies the MEANING-difference the chapter relies on?

- (A) धाया = 'patience' versus धैर्य = 'foster-nurse' — the meanings are simply swapped
- (B) धाया = 'a plot' versus धैर्य = 'a palace'
- (C) धाया = 'foster-nurse' versus धैर्य = 'patience/courage' — a difference of meaning marked by the vowels आ vs ऐ
- (D) धाया = 'queen' versus धैर्य = 'prince'

16. The locative ending in वीराङ्गनासु ('among heroic women') does crucial interpretive work. What would be LOST if the chapter instead used the nominative वीराङ्गनाः?

- (A) The sense that Panna is RANKED WITHIN the company of heroic women would be lost; nominative would merely name 'heroic women' without placing her among them
- (B) Nothing would be lost; locative and nominative mean the same here
- (C) It would gain the sense that the heroic women acted upon Panna
- (D) It would turn the phrase into 'by means of heroic women'

17. Why does the chapter describe the killing of the substitute boy without naming the prince as having died, even though the assassin believed he was killing the prince?

- (A) Because the prince did die and the chapter simply forgot to say so
- (B) Because the assassin knew the truth and deliberately spared the prince

- (C) Because beliefs in Sanskrit grammar change who actually dies
(D) The narrative tracks reality, not the assassin's belief — the assassin's mistaken intention does not make the prince the actual victim

18. Treat the four forms मारयितुम्, अमारयत्, मारयिष्यति, मारयतु as answers to four different questions. Which question does ONLY मारयितुम् answer?

- (A) 'What did the assassin do in the past?' — answered by 'he killed'
(B) 'For what PURPOSE did the assassin come?' — answered by 'to kill'
(C) 'What will the assassin do next?' — answered by 'he will kill'
(D) 'What command was given?' — answered by 'let him kill'

19. A debater says Panna's deed is 'no greater than any soldier who dies for his king.' What is the strongest reason, drawn from the chapter's logic, that her act is ranked higher?

- (A) A soldier is paid and Panna was not, so hers cost more money
(B) A soldier risks only his own life, whereas Panna surrendered a life dearer to her than her own — her child's — which is a harder thing to give
(C) A soldier fights many enemies while Panna faced only one, so hers was easier
(D) There is no difference; both simply die for the king

20. कुतन्त्रम् and सर्वस्वत्याग each carry a morally loaded prefix or member. Which option correctly identifies the morally loaded element in EACH and its effect?

- (A) कु- means 'good', so कुतन्त्रम् is a noble plan; सर्व- means 'small', so a tiny gift
(B) कु- means 'royal'; सर्व- means 'half', so a partial sacrifice
(C) कु- in कुतन्त्रम् means 'bad', marking the plan as wicked; सर्व- in सर्वस्व means 'all/whole', marking the renunciation as total
(D) कु- means 'new'; सर्व- means 'old', so an ancient custom

21. The events fall in षोडशे शतके. A student converts this to 'the 1500s CE.' Why is that conversion correct, and what common slip does it avoid?

- (A) It is wrong; the sixteenth century means the year 1600 only
(B) It is correct because 'sixteenth century' literally means sixteen years
(C) The sixteenth century spans the years 1501–1600 CE, so 'the 1500s' is right; it avoids the slip of reading the ordinal 'sixteenth' as the bare number 'sixteen' (year 16)
(D) It avoids confusing षोडशे with षष्ठे, which both mean 'the 1500s'

22. Which statement about the relationship-web of the four named figures is fully accurate?

- (A) Panna was Udai Singh's mother and Chandan's nurse; Banbir was Chandan's father
(B) Panna was nurse to Udai Singh and mother to Chandan; she let Chandan die so Udai Singh could live, while Banbir was the one who sought Udai Singh's death
(C) Chandan was the prince and Udai Singh was Panna's son; Banbir protected them both
(D) Udai Singh killed Chandan, and Panna plotted with Banbir against the king

23. A line reads 'पन्ना स्वपुत्रं राजपुत्रस्य शयनागारे अस्थापयत्.' Which English rendering is exact, attending to every case ending?

- (A) 'Panna's son placed the prince in a bedroom' — reading स्वपुत्रम् as the subject
- (B) 'Panna placed her own son in the prince's bedroom' — स्वपुत्रम् the object, राजपुत्रस्य possessive, शयनागारे locative
- (C) 'Panna placed the prince in her son's bedroom' — swapping who owns the room
- (D) 'Panna placed her son and the prince in a palace' — turning the locative into a plural object

24. The chapter could have ended by recording Banbir's name 'in golden letters' as the cleverer planner. Why would that ending contradict the meaning of स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः?

- (A) Because golden letters can only record the names of kings, not rivals
- (B) Because Banbir's name was too long to write in gold
- (C) Because स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः simply means 'in a long book', with no praise attached
- (D) The idiom honours the noble and worthy for lasting glory; reserving it for a treacherous murderer would invert its evaluative meaning

25. Given शयनागारम् = शयन ('sleeping') + आगारम् ('room'), and that the same -आगार element forms other room-words, which coined word would most plausibly mean 'a treasury'?

- (A) राजपुत्रागारम्, meaning 'a prince-room' = a treasury
- (B) मारयित्वागारम्, built from 'to kill'
- (C) षोडशागारम्, built from 'sixteenth'
- (D) कोषागारम् (a treasure-room) — same -आगारम् with a 'treasure' first member

26. Why does the chapter's classification as ऐतिहासिक (historical) rather than कथा/fable change how a reader should treat the dates and names in it?

- (A) It makes no difference; both genres invent their names freely
- (B) It means the reader should distrust every name as fictional
- (C) Because a historical account claims real persons and a real time-frame, the reader should treat Udai Singh, Mewar and षोडशे शतके as verifiable facts, not invented decoration
- (D) It means the moral lesson must be ignored as unimportant

27. Identify the SUBJECT, OBJECT and the role of मारयितुम् in 'सः राजपुत्रं मारयितुम् आगच्छत्.'

- (A) Subject राजपुत्रम्, object सः, and मारयितुम् the main verb
- (B) Subject सः ('he'), object राजपुत्रम् ('the prince'), and मारयितुम् the infinitive of purpose modifying आगच्छत् ('came in order to kill')
- (C) Subject मारयितुम्, object आगच्छत्, and सः an adjective
- (D) Subject सः, object मारयितुम्, and राजपुत्रम् the main verb

28. A moral-philosophy class debates whether Panna's act counts as 'sacrifice' if she felt it was simply her duty. Which reasoning best fits the chapter's portrayal?

- (A) It is not a sacrifice, since anything done from duty costs nothing
- (B) It is not a sacrifice, because she would have done it for payment anyway

- (C) It remains a sacrifice precisely because duty demanded the costliest possible loss — her child — and she met that demand rather than evading it
- (D) It is a sacrifice only if she regretted it afterward and refused her duty

29. Which chain correctly traces the CONSEQUENCE if Panna had refused the swap (counterfactual reasoning)?

- (A) Her son would still have died, but the prince would also have ruled
- (B) The assassin would have spared everyone, since there was no swap
- (C) Banbir would have been honoured स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः for his cleverness
- (D) The assassin would have killed the real prince, Mewar would have lost its rightful heir, and Banbir's scheme would have succeeded

30. In 'सः छलेन बालकम् अमारयत्' versus 'सः बालकं मारयितुम् छलम् अकरोत्', which contrast in grammatical meaning is correct?

- (A) Both assert a completed killing; only the word order differs
- (B) The first states a purpose and the second a completed act — the reverse of the truth
- (C) Neither contains any verb of killing; both are about deception only
- (D) The first asserts a completed killing 'by deception' (अमारयत्, past); the second asserts only that he 'made a deception in order to kill' (मारयितुम्, purpose) — no completed killing stated

31. The chapter's praise hinges on Panna surviving to bear the loss. Why is her SURVIVAL, often treated as a footnote, actually central to the kind of sacrifice described?

- (A) Because her survival proves she risked nothing at all
- (B) Because she lived on to endure the grief of losing her child, her sacrifice was not a single fatal moment but a lasting burden borne for loyalty's sake
- (C) Because survivors cannot be called heroic, so it lessens her status
- (D) Because it shows the assassin spared her, making the plot a failure

32. Match the case to its function as used in the chapter: छलेन, शयनागारे, राजपुत्रस्य, वीराङ्गनासु.

- (A) छलेन = genitive, शयनागारे = instrumental, राजपुत्रस्य = locative, वीराङ्गनासु = nominative
- (B) छलेन = locative, शयनागारे = genitive, राजपुत्रस्य = instrumental, वीराङ्गनासु = accusative
- (C) छलेन = instrumental ('by deception'), शयनागारे = locative ('in the bedroom'), राजपुत्रस्य = genitive ('of the prince'), वीराङ्गनासु = locative plural ('among heroines')
- (D) all four are nominative singular forms

33. Suppose a textbook glosses धाया as 'a woman who gives birth.' Using the chapter's own contrast with प्रसूता, expose the error precisely.

- (A) धाया is a foster-nurse who rears a child she did not bear; the one who gives birth is the प्रसूता, so the gloss confuses the two distinct roles
- (B) The gloss is correct, since धाया and प्रसूता are exact synonyms
- (C) धाया means a midwife, so 'gives birth' is close enough
- (D) धाया means the child itself, not any woman, so the gloss errs on that point

34. Which single sentence is simultaneously TRUE to the facts and CORRECT in every grammatical label it uses?

- (A) In षोडशे शतके (locative, 'in the sixteenth century'), Banbir came मारयितुम् (infinitive, 'to kill') the prince, and Panna's सर्वस्वत्याग — her son's life — saved the future king
- (B) In षष्ठे शतके, Banbir अमारयत् (infinitive, 'to kill') the prince, and Panna gave up her own life
- (C) In षोडशे शतके (instrumental), Panna came मारयत् ('to kill') her son, and the prince made the sacrifice
- (D) In the sixteenth century, the foolish (मूर्ख) Banbir honestly challenged Panna, whose wealth-त्याग saved her son

35. From the single word वीराङ्गना alone, which inference about the author's stance is justified, and which is NOT?

- (A) Justified: that she ruled a kingdom; NOT justified: that she was brave
- (B) Justified: that she was a soldier; NOT justified: that she was a woman
- (C) Justified: the author judges Panna courageous and worthy of honour; NOT justified: that she physically fought in war
- (D) Justified: that she was foolish; NOT justified: that she was loyal

36. Why does the chapter's logic make the assassin's SUCCESS at killing 'the boy in the bed' the very thing that proves the prince was saved?

- (A) Because the assassin's success means the real prince must also have died
- (B) Because a successful killing always means the plot failed
- (C) Because the boy killed was the substitute (Panna's son), the assassin's success against him is precisely what diverted the blow away from the real prince
- (D) Because the assassin spared the boy, which is why the prince lived

37. Arrange the moral concepts by how the chapter LAYERS them, from the rival's vice to Panna's supreme virtue: (P) छल, (Q) कुतन्त्रम्, (R) निष्ठा, (S) सर्वस्वत्याग.

- (A) The rival's छल feeds his कुतन्त्रम्; against these, Panna's निष्ठा issues in her सर्वस्वत्याग — vice (P,Q) opposed by virtue (R,S)
- (B) सर्वस्वत्याग and छल are the rival's traits; निष्ठा and कुतन्त्रम् are Panna's
- (C) All four describe Panna; the rival is given no named vice
- (D) निष्ठा drives the कुतन्त्रम्, and छल produces the सर्वस्वत्याग

38. A student writes षोडश शतके for 'in the sixteenth century.' Identify the single grammatical defect.

- (A) षोडश is already the ordinal; the defect is that शतके should be शतकम्
- (B) षोडश means 'sixth'; it should be षोडशे meaning 'sixtieth'
- (C) There is no defect; षोडश शतके is fully correct
- (D) षोडश is the cardinal 'sixteen'; the ordinal-locative 'in the sixteenth' requires षोडशे — so the form should be षोडशे शतके

- 39. If we replace मारयितुम् with रक्षितुम् in 'सः बालकं ____ आगच्छत्', the sentence's meaning flips. What does this substitution test about the -तुम् forms?
- (A) That रक्षितुम् is past tense while मारयितुम् is future
 - (B) That changing to रक्षितुम् makes the sentence ungrammatical
 - (C) That -तुम् only supplies the PURPOSE-verb (kill vs protect) while the frame stays an infinitive of purpose — so the morality of the aim, not the grammar, is what changes
 - (D) That -तुम् turns the verb into the subject of the sentence
- 40. The chapter implies a contrast between what Banbir DESIRED and what actually RESULTED. Which statement captures that gap most precisely?
- (A) He desired to protect the heir; the result was the heir's death
 - (B) He desired wealth; the result was that he gained the throne lawfully
 - (C) He desired the heir's death and the throne; the result was the heir's survival and his own scheme's defeat
 - (D) He desired the death of Panna; the result was that Panna died
- 41. Which option best explains why the SAME deed can be called both a 'mother's loss' and a 'kingdom's salvation' without contradiction?
- (A) They contradict, so one of the two descriptions must be false
 - (B) They are identical statements, so calling it both is redundant
 - (C) Both refer only to Panna's own death, described twice
 - (D) One description names the personal cost (a child's death) and the other its public consequence (the dynasty preserved); they describe different aspects of one event
- 42. Parse the agreement in 'वीराङ्गना पन्ना सर्वैः पूज्यते' ('the heroic woman Panna is honoured by all'). Which agreement-fact is correct?
- (A) वीराङ्गना is masculine because वीर- is masculine, so it disagrees with पन्ना
 - (B) सर्वैः is the nominative subject, and पन्ना is its object
 - (C) पूज्यते is past tense, so the honouring is finished
 - (D) वीराङ्गना and पन्ना are both feminine nominative singular (in apposition), while सर्वैः is instrumental plural marking the agent 'by all'
- 43. A reader proposes the 'real hero' is the assassin, since 'without him there would be no story.' Why does the chapter's value-scheme reject this?
- (A) Being necessary to the plot is not the same as being praiseworthy; the chapter honours moral worth, and the assassin's role is that of a tool of wickedness, not a hero
 - (B) Because the assassin was actually loyal to the prince all along
 - (C) Because the assassin made the सर्वस्वत्याग, not Panna
 - (D) Because heroism in Sanskrit means simply causing events to happen
- 44. Which transformation correctly changes the active 'बनवीरः बालकं मारयितुम् ऐच्छत्' into a faithful passive-sense paraphrase?

- (A) 'बालकः बनवीरम् अमारयत्' — 'the boy killed Banbir'
- (B) 'बनवीरः राजा अभवत्' — 'Banbir became king'
- (C) 'बनवीरेण बालकः हन्तुम् इष्टः' — 'by Banbir the boy was wished to be killed', with the agent now instrumental (बनवीरेण)
- (D) 'बालकः मारयितुम् ऐच्छत्' — 'the boy wished to kill'

45. The chapter teaches a value by example rather than by stating a rule. Which abstract principle is most directly EXEMPLIFIED — not merely mentioned — by Panna's deed?

- (A) That cleverness in deception is always rewarded with a throne
- (B) That fidelity to a sacred trust can demand surrendering even what one holds dearest
- (C) That a nurse's wages should equal a mother's love
- (D) That the sixteenth century was a peaceful era in Mewar

46. Given the contrast between राजगृह and राजपुत्र, which sentence contains a place-vs-person confusion?

- (A) 'The assassin stabbed the राजगृह as it slept' — a palace (place) cannot sleep; only the राजपुत्र (person) can
- (B) 'The assassin entered the राजगृह' — entering a place is fine
- (C) 'The राजपुत्र slept in his bed' — a person sleeping is fine
- (D) 'The राजपुत्र was the target' — a person being targeted is fine

47. Why might one argue that Panna's deed reflects more on her CHARACTER than on her circumstances, and what textual cue supports this?

- (A) The chapter says luck alone saved the prince, so character is irrelevant
- (B) She had no choice at all, so only circumstance matters
- (C) The golden-letters phrase praises the assassin's circumstance, not Panna
- (D) Faced with a forced choice, she chose the harder, loyal option; the chapter's honouring her स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः signals that her choice, not mere chance, is what is praised

48. Which option lists, in correct order, who was the AGENT and who the PATIENT in each clause: (1) the rival schemed, (2) Panna swapped her son, (3) the assassin struck?

- (A) (1) agent rival / patient the heir's life; (2) agent Panna / patient her son; (3) agent assassin / patient the substitute boy
- (B) (1) agent the heir / patient the rival; (2) agent the son / patient Panna; (3) agent the boy / patient the assassin
- (C) (1) agent Panna / patient the rival; (2) agent the assassin / patient the son; (3) agent the heir / patient the boy
- (D) all three clauses share the same agent, the assassin

49. If a translator renders सर्वस्वत्याग as 'a generous donation,' what nuance of the chapter is lost?

- (A) Nothing is lost; 'generous donation' captures it exactly
- (B) It overstates the loss, since त्याग means a small gift

- (C) The totality and irreversibility of the loss — 'donation' suggests giving spare wealth, while सर्वस्वत्याग means surrendering one's entire dearest possession
- (D) It changes the doer from Panna to the rival

50. The story can be read as a clash between two kinds of intelligence. Which reading is faithful to the chapter's moral framing?

- (A) Both are equally praised, since both used clever plans
- (B) Banbir's intelligence is bent to evil (दुष्टबुद्धि), while Panna's is wisdom guided by loyalty — so the chapter elevates morally-directed cleverness over cunning
- (C) Panna is the foolish one and Banbir the wise one
- (D) Neither showed intelligence; the outcome was pure accident

51. In 'पन्नायाः पुत्रः राजपुत्रस्य कृते अम्रियत' ('Panna's son died for the sake of the prince'), what does the form राजपुत्रस्य कृते express?

- (A) Agency — 'by the prince', the prince doing the dying
- (B) Location — 'in the prince', a place
- (C) Possession only — 'the prince's', with no notion of benefit
- (D) Purpose/benefit — 'for the sake of the prince', the prince being the one for whose benefit the death occurred

52. Which single-sentence summary fails on EXACTLY one count (one factual or grammatical slip), making it the trickiest near-correct option?

- (A) 'In the sixteenth century, the loyal धाया Panna let her own son be killed मारयितुम् so the prince might live, and she is honoured स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः' — the slip: मारयितुम् ('to kill') cannot describe the son being killed; the son was the one killed, not the purpose-agent
- (B) 'In the sixth century, Panna died for the prince' — this has two slips, not one
- (C) 'Panna the queen killed the assassin' — this has multiple slips
- (D) 'A foolish rival honestly challenged Panna' — this has multiple slips

53. Why is it more accurate to say Panna 'redirected' the assassin's blow than that she 'fought off' the assassin?

- (A) She drew a sword and defeated the assassin in combat
- (B) She bribed the assassin to leave the prince alone
- (C) She hid the prince in the palace treasury and barred the door
- (D) She did not battle the assassin; she ensured the wrong child lay in the bed, so the blow fell on the substitute — a redirection by stratagem, not a fight

54. A composite question: which option correctly pairs THREE words with all-correct glosses, with no slip?

- (A) वीराङ्गना = 'brave woman', सर्वस्व = 'one's everything', कुतन्त्रम् = 'an evil scheme'
- (B) वीराङ्गना = 'a heroic place', सर्वस्व = 'small gift', कुतन्त्रम् = 'good plan'
- (C) वीराङ्गना = 'a queen', सर्वस्व = 'someone else's wealth', कुतन्त्रम् = 'a bedroom'
- (D) वीराङ्गना = 'a weapon', सर्वस्व = 'one's life only', कुतन्त्रम् = 'a wet-nurse'

55. Consider the claim: 'Because the assassin acted छलेन, the killing was not really his fault.' Which evaluation fits the chapter's moral stance?

- (A) Correct — deception removes moral responsibility from the doer
- (B) Acting छलेन (by deception) compounds rather than excuses the fault, since deceit adds dishonour to the wrongdoing
- (C) Correct — only open killings are blameworthy in the chapter
- (D) Irrelevant — the chapter assigns no blame to anyone

56. Which inference about Mewar's later history is LICENSED by the chapter, and which is merely speculation beyond it?

- (A) Licensed: the exact number of years he reigned; speculation: that he survived at all
- (B) Licensed: that he abdicated immediately; speculation: that Panna existed
- (C) Licensed: that the saved prince Udai Singh went on to occupy his rightful place in Mewar's line; speculation: the specific battles or laws of his reign
- (D) Licensed: that Mewar fell soon after; speculation: the century involved

57. The chapter's title-word वीराङ्गना and the closing tribute वीराङ्गनासु echo each other. What rhetorical effect does this framing create?

- (A) It shows the two words are unrelated coincidences
- (B) It frames Panna's whole story as the demonstration of what वीराङ्गना means, opening with the claim and closing by placing her among such women
- (C) It signals that the chapter is about many women, not Panna
- (D) It proves the title was a printing error repeated at the end

58. Pull everything together: which single statement is fully consistent with the chapter's FACTS, GRAMMAR, and MORAL framing all at once?

- (A) In षष्ठे शतके the मूर्ख Banbir अमारयत् (infinitive) the prince, so Panna gave up her own life and her name is forgotten
- (B) In षोडशे शतके the दुष्टबुद्धि Banbir sent an assassin मारयितुम् (to kill) the heir Udai Singh; the loyal धाया Panna's सर्वस्वत्याग — her son Chandan's life — saved the future king, and so her name stands वीराङ्गनासु, written स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः
- (C) In the sixteenth century Panna the queen ruled, killed Banbir by छल, and Chandan crowned himself
- (D) Banbir honestly challenged Panna, whose wealth-त्याग saved Chandan, and the assassin is honoured स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः

59. A student argues that since धाया is glossed by the synonym धात्री, the two words must differ in meaning the way धाया differs from धैर्य. Where does this reasoning go wrong?

- (A) धात्री is offered as a SYNONYM clarifying धाया (both = foster-nurse), whereas धैर्य is a different-meaning near-homophone; synonymy and accidental sound-similarity are opposite relations
- (B) It is right; धात्री and धैर्य both mean 'courage', so धाया differs from both equally

(C) It is right; ઘાત્રી means a bedroom, so it contrasts with ઘાયા like ઘૈર્ય does

(D) ઘાત્રી actually means 'a prince', so it differs from ઘાયા in meaning

60. Re-rank the three persons by the GRAVITY of what each loses or risks in the story, from greatest to least, as the chapter frames it: Panna, Chandan, Udai Singh.

(A) Chandan loses the most (his life); Panna loses the next-most (her child and bears lifelong grief); Udai Singh loses nothing — he is the one saved

(B) Udai Singh loses the most (his throne); Panna next; Chandan least

(C) Panna loses the most (her own life); Chandan next; Udai Singh least

(D) All three lose equally, since all three were targeted

Worked Solutions

1. (A) The compound joins 'brave' with 'woman' precisely to claim battlefield-grade valour for a woman acting in a caretaker's role; she neither commanded an army (which would suit वीरः/सेनापति) nor ruled (which राज्ञी would imply), and the term plainly affirms, not denies, female courage.

2. (C) The act's historical weight rests on two joined facts — a child died AND the future king lived; remove the prince's survival and the renunciation, though still real, no longer secures the dynasty, which is what the chapter celebrates. The sacrifice would still be Panna's child's, not Panna's own.

3. (D) Because the prince was not her own child, no natural maternal pull bound her to him; choosing his life over her real son's makes the deed an act of chosen निष्ठा (loyalty to duty), which is morally heavier than instinct — and the option crediting mere wages misreads the chapter's praise.

4. (A) वीर ends in अ and अङ्गना begins with अ; two like simple vowels (अ+अ) merge into the long counterpart आ, giving वीराङ्गना. Guṇa needs unlike vowels (अ+इ→ए), vṛddhi needs अ+ए→ऐ, and there is no visarga at the junction.

5. (B) The chapter states the assassin came मारयितुम् (infinitive of purpose), so reporting a completed past killing already misuses the form; and even granting a killing, the victim in the prince's bed was Panna's own son — so naming the prince as the one killed compounds a factual error onto the grammatical one.

6. (B) The scheme comes first; it prompts Panna's pre-emptive swap; the swap makes the assassin's strike fall on the wrong child; and only because the true heir is thereby spared can he later rule. Placing the killing before the swap, or the reign before the killing, breaks the cause–effect order.

7. (D) The ending -ैः marks the instrumental (the means by which Panna's name is written), so the golden letters are the tool of remembering, not the thing remembered; rendering them as the grammatical subject swaps the instrumental for a nominative. It is already plural, and the word is a noun, so number and part-of-speech are not the issue.

8. (A) A carefully built कुतन्त्रम् that almost worked shows capacity, not stupidity; the chapter's word दुष्ट pins the fault to a corrupt will. Calling him मूर्ख would shift blame from moral evil to mental weakness — an unwarranted excuse — and the two words are not synonyms.

9. (B) The boy in the bed was Panna's son (ii true), the prince lived (iii true), and the assassin came to kill the heir (iv true); claim (i) is the classic trap — Panna herself was not the one killed, so it alone is false.

10. (A) An infinitive of purpose (-तुम्) attaches to a finite verb to state the aim; here it tells why the sending happened. It is not itself the finite verb (that is अप्रेषयत्), not the subject (दुष्टबुद्धिः), and not an adjective of the object.

11. (C) One may grant warm feeling for the prince, yet love for a fostered child cannot by itself justify killing one's own; the decisive extra factor is fidelity to the entrusted duty of a धाया — which is exactly what the chapter foregrounds, and there is no claim she was coerced.

12. (D) Glossed स्वीयं सम्पूर्णम् ('one's complete own'), the word denotes the totality of what one holds dearest, which differs by person; for a mother that can be her child's life, not money or only her own life — and it is no mere token.

13. (D) Two faults must go: षष्ठे ('sixth') must become षोडशे ('sixteenth') for the date, and the false completed killing अमारयत् must yield to the chapter's purpose-statement (he wished/came to kill, मारयितुम्), since the prince was not actually killed. The other options fix at most one fault or introduce a new one.

14. (B) His use of छल (trickery) and a hidden assassin marks him as both deceitful and cowardly; an open challenge would remove exactly those two traits. The chapter never calls him brave or loyal, and his moral wickedness would not be erased merely by fighting openly.

15. (C) धाया denotes the wet-nurse role, while धैर्य denotes steadfastness; the vowel contrast (आ vs ऐ) carries the whole semantic difference. The other options either reverse the genuine glosses or invent unrelated meanings.

16. (A) The locative plural -सु expresses 'in/among the group', situating Panna inside that honoured set; the bare nominative would only list the category, dropping the placement-among-them. The instrumental sense ('by means of') belongs to a different ending.

17. (D) The deception worked precisely because the assassin's belief was false; the chapter reports what truly happened (Panna's son died, the prince lived), not the mistaken aim. A killer's wrong belief cannot transfer the death onto the spared child.

18. (B) The infinitive of purpose -तुम् uniquely answers 'to what end / why'; the past (अमारयत्) answers what was done, the future (मारयिष्यति) what will be done, and the imperative (मारयतु) reports a command — each a different question.

19. (B) The chapter frames her sacrifice as unique because what she gave was not her own life but her son's — the dearest of her possessions; giving up that is harder than risking oneself, which is the soldier's case. Pay and the number of foes are not the point.

20. (C) The prefix कु- conveys badness, making कुतन्त्रम् an evil scheme; सर्व- conveys totality, so सर्वस्व is 'all one owns' and its त्याग a complete renunciation. Glossing कु- as good or सर्व- as small reverses the very force the words carry.

21. (C) An ordinal century N covers years $(N-1) \cdot 100 + 1$ to $N \cdot 100$, so the sixteenth century is 1501–1600, i.e. the 1500s; the slip avoided is treating the ordinal as a count of years. षष्ठे would mean the sixth century, not the 1500s.

22. (B) Panna's blood-son was Chandan, while Udai Singh was the royal child she nursed; she sacrificed Chandan to save Udai Singh, and Banbir was the rival who sought the prince's death — relationships the wrong options scramble.

23. (B) स्वपुत्रम् (accusative) is what is placed, राजपुत्रस्य (genitive) shows whose room, and शयनागारे (locative) is where; the exact reading is 'her own son into the prince's bedroom.' The distractors mis-assign subject, possessor, or case.

24. (D) Writing a name in golden letters is an idiom of high honour reserved for the admirable; applying it to a treacherous killer would reverse the praise the phrase exists to give. The phrase carries evaluation, not mere length or royalty.

- 25. (D) The productive -आगार means 'room/store', so a treasury joins it to कोष ('treasure') → कोषागार. Building it on 'prince', 'to kill', or 'sixteenth' yields nonsense for 'treasury'.
- 26. (C) Historical writing stakes a claim to real referents, so the named ruler, kingdom and century are presented as actual and checkable, unlike a fable's invented cast — yet the moral significance remains, not is discarded.
- 27. (B) सः in the nominative is the doer, राजपुत्रम् in the accusative is the one to be killed, and मारयितुम् gives the purpose of the finite verb आगच्छत्. The other options misread case roles or confuse the infinitive with a finite verb.
- 28. (C) Sacrifice is measured by what is given up; that the loss flowed from duty does not lessen its cost — her son's life. The chapter honours her for fulfilling, not dodging, that costly duty; pay and later regret are not the test.
- 29. (D) Without the substitute, the assassin would have found and killed the actual heir, the dynasty would have lost its successor, and the wicked plot would have won — which is exactly the catastrophe Panna's act prevented.
- 30. (D) अमारयत् is a past finite verb reporting that the killing happened, while मारयितुम् is only the purpose attached to 'made a deception'; so the first reports a deed done, the second merely an aim. The contrast is real and not reversed.
- 31. (B) Had she died, hers would resemble a soldier's one-moment sacrifice; living means she carried the grief of her son's death afterward, deepening the cost. Survival here magnifies rather than diminishes the heroism, and it does not mean she risked nothing.
- 32. (C) -एन marks instrument, -ए marks locative singular, -स्य marks possession, and -सु marks locative plural; the first option assigns each its true function. The others scramble the endings or wrongly flatten all to nominative.
- 33. (A) The chapter sets धाया (the nurturing foster-nurse) against प्रसूता (the birth-mother); gluing 'gives birth' onto धाया collapses that very contrast — the births belong to the प्रसूता. The two are not synonyms, and धाया is a woman's role, not the child.
- 34. (A) Only the first gets every label right — षोडशे is locative, मारयितुम् is the infinitive, and the sacrifice was the son's life saving the heir. The others mislabel अमारयत् as an infinitive, the locative as instrumental, or distort the facts (her own life, foolishness, an honest challenge).
- 35. (C) The valour-term वीराङ्गना licenses the inference of admired courage but says nothing about literal warfare; one cannot read 'soldier' or 'ruler' out of it, and the term certainly affirms (not denies) both her womanhood and her bravery.

36. (C) The plan worked by misdirection: the assassin did kill, but killed the decoy; that completed killing of the wrong child is exactly what spared the heir. Success against the substitute and the prince's survival are two sides of the same deception.

37. (A) छल (deceit) and कुतन्त्रम् (evil scheme) are the rival's vices; निष्ठा (loyalty) is Panna's motive and सर्वस्वत्याग (total renunciation) its result — a clean vice-vs-virtue pairing the distractors cross-wire.

38. (D) The cardinal षोडश must become the ordinal in the locative, षोडशे, to agree with शतके and mean 'in the sixteenth century'; leaving the cardinal is the defect. शतके is correctly locative, and षोडश does not mean 'sixth'.

39. (C) Both रक्षितुम् ('to protect') and मारयितुम् ('to kill') are infinitives of purpose; swapping them keeps the same grammatical slot and only reverses the aim from harm to help — showing -तुम् marks purpose regardless of the verb's meaning.

40. (C) His aim was to kill the rightful heir and seize power; what came about was the heir's escape (via the swap) and the plot's failure — the precise reversal the chapter underscores. He never sought to protect anyone, nor was Panna his target's death.

41. (D) A single act can carry a private cost and a public benefit at once; 'a mother's loss' names what Panna paid, 'a kingdom's salvation' names what Mewar gained — complementary, not contradictory, and neither concerns Panna's own death.

42. (D) The compound वीराङ्गना ends in अङ्गना (feminine) and stands in apposition to the feminine पन्ना, both nominative; सर्वैः (ः) is the instrumental agent of the passive पूज्यते. The masculinity of वीर- does not override the feminine head अङ्गना.

43. (A) Causal necessity to a narrative confers no virtue; the chapter measures heroism by moral worth, on which the assassin — an instrument of the wicked plot — scores nothing. The renunciation was Panna's, and heroism is not mere event-causation.

44. (C) Recasting to a passive sense moves the agent बनवीर into the instrumental (बनवीरेण) and makes the boy the grammatical patient, preserving who intends to kill whom. The other options reverse the agent and patient or change the event entirely.

45. (B) Panna's act concretely shows loyalty to an entrusted duty overriding even the dearest personal good — the principle the story dramatises. Reward for deception is the rival's failed assumption, and the other options are unrelated to the deed's lesson.

46. (A) Sleeping is something only a person does, so attaching it to राजगृह (the palace) commits the place-as-person error; the prince (राजपुत्र) is the one who could sleep. The other sentences correctly keep place-actions with the place and person-actions with the person.

47. (D) Circumstance set the dilemma, but the lasting honour (golden letters) is bestowed for the choice she made within it — the costly, loyal one — which is a matter of character. The text neither credits luck nor denies her agency, and the praise is hers.

48. (A) The rival acts upon the heir's life; Panna acts upon (relocates) her son; the assassin acts upon the boy in the bed — each clause has its own distinct agent and patient, which the first option alone gets right.

49. (C) A 'donation' implies giving something one can spare, whereas सर्वस्वत्याग is the renunciation of all one holds dearest — here a child's life; the softer word drains away the totality and finality. त्याग is not a small gift, and the doer is unchanged.

50. (B) The text marks Banbir's mind as corrupt (दुष्टबुद्धि) and exalts Panna's loyal wisdom; the lesson favours intelligence ruled by virtue over cunning serving wickedness — not an equal praise of both, nor an accident, nor a reversal of who is wise.

51. (D) The postposition कृते with the genitive expresses 'for the sake of / for the benefit of'; here the son's death served the prince's benefit. It does not make the prince the agent or a location, and it adds the benefactive sense beyond bare possession.

52. (A) The first sentence is right on the date, role, survival, son's death, and honour, but misuses मारयितुम् — an infinitive naming the assassin's purpose 'to kill', not a description attachable to the son who was killed; that is its single fault. The others stack several errors each.

53. (D) The rescue worked through the substitution, not through any combat; Panna placed her son where the assassin expected the prince, redirecting the strike. The chapter describes no sword-fight, bribe, or treasury-hiding.

54. (A) Only the first triple is wholly correct: brave-woman, one's-entire-own, and evil-scheme. The others slip on at least one gloss — turning वीराङ्गना into a place/queen/weapon, or सर्वस्व into a small gift/another's wealth, or कुतन्त्रम् into a good plan/bedroom/nurse.

55. (B) The chapter treats deception as an aggravating trait of the wicked plot, not a mitigating one; striking by trickery makes the act more dishonourable, not less. Responsibility stays with the deceiver, and the chapter clearly assigns blame to the rival's side.

56. (C) The chapter supports the inference that the rescued heir took his place in the Maharana lineage, but it does not supply reign-length, battles, or laws — those go beyond the text. His survival and the century are stated, not speculative.

57. (B) Beginning with वीराङ्गना as a label and ending by ranking her वीराङ्गनासु ('among heroines') brackets the narrative as a proof of that label — a deliberate frame, not coincidence, error, or a shift away from Panna.

58. (B) Only the first is right throughout: correct century (षोडशे), the rival's moral fault (दुष्ट not मूर्ख), the infinitive of purpose (मारयितुम्), the true sacrifice (Chandan's life, not Panna's own), the heir's survival, and the honour among heroines in golden letters. Each distractor breaks the date, a gloss, a grammar label, or the facts.

59. (A) The chapter uses धात्री to explain धाया — they share the meaning 'foster-nurse', a synonym pairing; धैर्य merely sounds similar but means something else (steadfastness). Confusing a clarifying synonym with a misleading homophone reverses the two relations; धात्री means neither courage, bedroom, nor prince.

60. (A) Chandan pays with his life — the ultimate loss; Panna does not die but surrenders her dearest and lives on grieving; Udai Singh is precisely the one preserved, losing nothing. The distractors wrongly kill Panna, demote Chandan, or flatten the unequal costs.
