Paper 4 — (progressively harder)

Subject	Social Science (NCERT Class 7)
Chapter	10 — The Constitution of India — An Introduction
Total Questions	60 (Multiple Choice, single correct)
Maximum Marks	240
Suggested Time	90 minutes

Marking scheme: +4 for each correct answer · -1 for each wrong answer · 0 if unattempted.

Instructions: Each question has four options (A), (B), (C), (D); exactly one is correct. Classic traps: 'secular' means equal respect for all faiths and freedom of religion (not anti-religion); the Constitution is a living document that can be amended (not fixed forever); Republic Day (26 Jan 1950, coming into force) is not Independence (15 Aug 1947); India studied many constitutions and adapted selectively (not copied one country); Fundamental Rights are court-enforceable while Directive Principles only guide the government; 'We, the People' means the people gave the Constitution to themselves; adoption (26 Nov 1949) and coming into force (26 Jan 1950) are distinct stages. Do not write on this paper — mark answers on your answer sheet.

1. A group decides that before anyone joins, the powers of leaders, the rights of members and the way disputes are settled will all be fixed in one supreme written agreement that no single leader may override. The feature this most directly mirrors is that a constitution:
- (A) is a temporary plan that the strongest leader may rewrite whenever convenient
 - (B) is the supreme document that sets agreed powers, rights and limits in advance, binding even the most powerful within the group
 - (C) lists only the names and wealth of the founding members
 - (D) is drawn up only after a serious dispute has already damaged the group
2. Two statements are made about a constitution: (i) it sets up the organs of government and the rules they follow, and (ii) it states the nation's long-term goals and values. The best description of how these two fit together is that a constitution:

- (A) combines the working rules of government with the broad values and goals the nation aims at, doing both at once
- (B) does only (i), since values and goals belong to a separate yearly budget
- (C) does only (ii), since the structure of government is decided by a foreign treaty
- (D) does neither, because both are decided afresh by whoever holds power each year

3. Which of the following is the ODD ONE OUT, because it is NOT something a constitution does?

- (A) sets up the legislature, executive and judiciary and arranges checks among them
- (B) guarantees rights that citizens can defend in the courts
- (C) decides the personal career and daily job of every individual citizen
- (D) states the nation's long-term goals and core values

4. A country abolishes its constitution entirely. Which consequence follows MOST directly from this single change?

- (A) the nation's wealth is at once divided equally among all citizens
- (B) elections automatically become free and fair without any rules
- (C) the country no longer needs any government of any kind
- (D) there are no longer any agreed limits on government power or guaranteed rights, so authority can be used unpredictably

5. Judges, ministers and other top officials all take a pledge to uphold the Constitution. The strongest conclusion this supports is that the Constitution:

- (A) stands above every individual, so even the most powerful officials are bound by it
- (B) binds only ordinary citizens, while officials may set it aside at will
- (C) carries authority only on Republic Day each year
- (D) is a purely ceremonial text with no real force over anyone

6. A citizen claims, 'A constitution is just a treaty India signs with foreign countries.' The best correction is that a constitution is:

- (A) indeed a foreign treaty, but one that only covers trade
- (B) the nation's own supreme rulebook setting out its principles, government and citizens' rights and duties, not an agreement with foreign states
- (C) a yearly account of how the government spends its money
- (D) a collection of the country's traditional folk songs

7. Which single statement BEST explains why a country needs a constitution in the first place?

- (A) so that the country becomes the largest in the world by area
- (B) so that no further laws ever have to be made again
- (C) so that the government can act without any limits on its power
- (D) so that the powers of government and the rights and limits of all are agreed in advance, giving everyone a clear and stable framework

8. The Constituent Assembly was formed in 1946 and worked for roughly three years before the text was adopted. Together these facts best support the conclusion that the Constitution was:

- (A) written in a single sitting by one individual
- (B) drawn up by the British Parliament before 1946
- (C) copied unchanged from a single foreign country
- (D) the product of a careful, deliberate process by a body of many members over several years

9. After Partition the Constituent Assembly's membership changed to about 299, and it included several women members. Which conclusion does this composition best support?

- (A) a tiny handful of men alone framed the entire Constitution
- (B) the Constitution was framed by representatives sent from foreign countries
- (C) a sizeable, diverse assembly drew on many voices, helping the Constitution reflect a varied nation rather than one group
- (D) the Constitution was written to serve only the wealthiest members

10. Dr. Rajendra Prasad and Dr. B. R. Ambedkar held two DIFFERENT leading roles in framing the Constitution. The correct pairing is:

- (A) Ambedkar presided over the whole Assembly, while Prasad headed the Drafting Committee
- (B) Prasad presided over the whole Constituent Assembly, while Ambedkar headed the Drafting Committee that wrote the text
- (C) both jointly headed the Drafting Committee and held no other role
- (D) Prasad headed the Drafting Committee, while Ambedkar served only as a foreign adviser

11. The Constitution was adopted on 26 November 1949 but came into force only on 26 January 1950. The clearest meaning of this gap between the two dates is that:

- (A) the Constitution was rejected in 1949 and then rewritten in 1950
- (B) accepting the final text (adoption) and the text becoming operative law (coming into force) were two separate stages
- (C) both dates mark the day India won freedom from Britain
- (D) the Constitution was both adopted and enforced on exactly the same day

12. A student writes that the very same event is celebrated on 15 August and on 26 January. Why is this mistaken?

- (A) 15 August 1947 marks Independence from Britain, while 26 January 1950 marks the Constitution coming into force and India becoming a republic — two different events
- (B) the two dates are simply two names for India winning freedom in 1950

(C) 26 January marks Independence and 15 August marks the Constitution coming into force

(D) both dates mark the day the Constituent Assembly was first formed

13. Place these four events in correct order, EARLIEST first: Constitution comes into force; Constituent Assembly formed; India becomes independent; Constitution adopted.

(A) India becomes independent (1947), Constituent Assembly formed (1946), Constitution comes into force (1950), Constitution adopted (1949)

(B) Constitution adopted (1949), India becomes independent (1947), Constituent Assembly formed (1946), Constitution comes into force (1950)

(C) Constitution comes into force (1950), Constitution adopted (1949), India becomes independent (1947), Constituent Assembly formed (1946)

(D) Constituent Assembly formed (1946), India becomes independent (1947), Constitution adopted (1949), Constitution comes into force (1950)

14. Why is Republic Day, not the date the Constituent Assembly was formed, chosen to celebrate India becoming a republic?

(A) because 26 January 1950 is when the Constitution came into force, actually making India a republic, whereas 1946 only began the drafting body

(B) because the Assembly was formed on 26 January and that is the same as becoming a republic

(C) because India became independent on 26 January, which is what 'republic' means

(D) because the Constitution was adopted and came into force on the day the Assembly was formed

15. A diverse Constituent Assembly, drawing on India's freedom struggle and its civilisational heritage, worked carefully over three years. Taken together these facts best show that the Constitution was:

(A) a hurried text written by outsiders in a single day

(B) a direct copy of one foreign country's constitution

(C) a decree handed down by a hereditary monarch

(D) an Indian-made document, deliberately framed by a broad assembly and rooted in the values India had fought for

16. The chapter names three great influences on the Constitution: the freedom struggle, India's civilisational heritage, and learnings from other countries. Which option lists an example of EACH influence in that order?

(A) a hereditary monarchy; a foreign king's decree; a United Nations vote

(B) an order from the British Parliament; a single foreign treaty; banning all elections

(C) the goal of liberty and equality fought for in the freedom movement; values from India's long civilisational past; the parliamentary system studied from Britain

(D) a yearly budget; a folk songbook; a foreign company's policy

17. India's parliamentary system draws on Britain, its Fundamental Rights idea on the USA, and its Directive Principles on Ireland. The best explanation of this pattern is that India:

- (A) copied the entire constitution of Britain word for word
- (B) borrowed selectively, taking different features from different countries and adapting them to suit India
- (C) took every single provision from the United States
- (D) refused to study any other country and invented all from scratch

18. A neighbouring country demands that India scrap one of its own internal laws. A citizen replies that the Preamble already settles why India need not obey. Which word supports the reply, and why?

- (A) Secular — India treats all religions equally, so it can ignore the demand
- (B) Socialist — India shares wealth fairly, so foreign demands do not apply
- (C) Republic — India has an elected head of state, so neighbours have no say
- (D) Sovereign — India has the supreme right to decide its own internal and external matters free from outside control

19. Assertion: India did not simply copy one foreign country's constitution. Reason: The Constituent Assembly studied many constitutions and chose what suited India, weaving them with India's own values. Which is correct?

- (A) The assertion is true but the reason is false
- (B) Both the assertion and the reason are true, and the reason correctly explains the assertion
- (C) The assertion is false but the reason is true
- (D) Both the assertion and the reason are false

20. Which feature of the Constitution most DIRECTLY reflects the influence of India's freedom movement?

- (A) building in the values of liberty and equality that India had struggled for
- (B) keeping a hereditary monarch as the permanent head of state
- (C) banning elections so rulers would not need to be chosen
- (D) handing all decisions to a foreign authority

21. Match each borrowed feature to its main source country correctly:

- (A) parliamentary system — USA; Fundamental Rights — Ireland; Directive Principles — Britain
- (B) parliamentary system — Ireland; Fundamental Rights — Britain; Directive Principles — USA

(C) parliamentary system — Britain; Fundamental Rights and judicial review — USA; Directive Principles — Ireland

(D) parliamentary system — France; Fundamental Rights — Japan; Directive Principles — Britain

22. A citizen argues that because India borrowed ideas from other countries, the Constitution is 'not really Indian.' The best correction is that:

(A) the citizen is right, since any borrowing makes a constitution foreign

(B) the Constitution was in fact written entirely by foreign experts

(C) India adapted selected ideas to its own needs and combined them with its own freedom-struggle and heritage values, making the Constitution genuinely Indian

(D) India borrowed nothing at all, so the question does not arise

23. The legislature makes a law, the executive carries it out, and the judiciary can strike the law down if it breaks the Constitution. This whole arrangement is best named:

(A) separation of powers with checks and balances, so no single organ becomes too powerful

(B) a merger of the three organs into one decision-making body

(C) a system where the judiciary alone makes and enforces every law

(D) three organs that can never influence or limit one another at all

24. A teacher asks why concentrating all power in one office is dangerous and how the Constitution guards against it. The best answer is that the Constitution:

(A) merges all powers into one office for faster decisions

(B) lets the executive control both the courts and the legislature

(C) separates the legislature, executive and judiciary and lets them check one another, so power is not concentrated in one place

(D) removes all rules so that no office has any limits at all

25. A Prime Minister, claiming to be the most powerful person in the country, tries to act in a way the courts have ruled unconstitutional. Why does the Constitution forbid this?

(A) the Constitution can be overruled by whoever currently holds the most power

(B) the Constitution applies only to ordinary citizens, not to ministers

(C) the Constitution takes effect only on Republic Day each year

(D) the Constitution stands above every individual, so even the most powerful official is bound by it

26. A law passed by the legislature is found to conflict with the Constitution. Because the Constitution is the supreme law, what follows?

(A) the Constitution must automatically change to match the new law

(B) both the law and the Constitution are cancelled together

- (C) the newer law always wins because it was passed more recently
- (D) the conflicting law can be struck down, since no ordinary law may override the Constitution

27. Which statement BEST explains why the Constitution is regarded as the supreme law of the land?

- (A) it is the longest book ever printed in India
- (B) it is read aloud at every official ceremony
- (C) it can be set aside by whoever holds the most power at the time
- (D) all other laws must conform to it, and even the government and its officials are bound by it

28. India's Constitution divides powers between a central government and state governments. This basic arrangement is described as a:

- (A) single government with no states beneath it at all
- (B) system in which the states hold all power and the centre holds none
- (C) federal structure that shares powers between the centre and the states
- (D) system in which one religious leader holds every power

29. Why does the Constitution deliberately keep the three organs separate yet able to check one another, rather than merging them for speed?

- (A) to stop any one organ from misusing power and so protect citizens' rights
- (B) to make government slow purely for the sake of being slow
- (C) to let one organ take complete control of the other two
- (D) to remove the need for any laws to be made at all

30. Which of the following is an example of a Fundamental Right being EXERCISED, rather than a duty or a directive principle?

- (A) a citizen voluntarily plants trees to protect the environment
- (B) the government frames a policy aimed at reducing poverty over time
- (C) a citizen approaches a court to protect a right the government has violated
- (D) a citizen shows respect for the National Flag and the National Anthem

31. A government scheme to reduce inequality cannot be challenged in court for failing to fully achieve its aim. This scheme is most likely based on a:

- (A) Directive Principle of State Policy, which guides the government but cannot be enforced in court
- (B) Fundamental Right, which can always be enforced in the courts
- (C) Fundamental Duty, which is a responsibility placed on citizens
- (D) Preamble keyword, which has no link to government policy

32. Which statement correctly distinguishes all three of Fundamental Rights, Fundamental Duties and Directive Principles?

- (A) all three can be enforced in court in exactly the same way
- (B) Rights are court-enforceable protections for citizens; Duties are citizens' responsibilities; Directive Principles guide the government but cannot be enforced in court
- (C) Rights are citizens' responsibilities, while Duties are claimed in court
- (D) Directive Principles are court-enforceable, while Rights are only goals

33. Respecting the National Flag, protecting the environment and safeguarding public property all belong to the SAME category. That category is:

- (A) Fundamental Rights enforceable in court
- (B) Fundamental Duties — responsibilities of citizens towards the nation
- (C) Directive Principles binding on the courts
- (D) powers reserved for ministers alone

34. A student says, 'Directive Principles are pointless because courts cannot enforce them.' The best reply is that they:

- (A) are right to be called pointless, since unenforceable rules do nothing
- (B) can in fact be claimed in court exactly like Fundamental Rights
- (C) are not pointless — they guide the government in shaping its laws and policies even though courts do not enforce them
- (D) are binding only on individual citizens, not on the government

35. Fundamental Duties were added by an amendment in 1976, well after the Constitution came into force. What does the fact that they were ADDED later best show?

- (A) the Constitution had been rejected and then rewritten from scratch in 1976
- (B) the Constitution is a living document that can be amended to include new provisions over time
- (C) the Constitution is rewritten completely every single year
- (D) the Duties were copied directly from a foreign ruler's decree

36. A citizen exercises freedom of speech AND faces a responsibility to protect the environment. The correct classification of these two is:

- (A) both are Fundamental Rights enforceable in court
- (B) both are Fundamental Duties of citizens
- (C) freedom of speech is a Fundamental Right; protecting the environment is a Fundamental Duty
- (D) freedom of speech is a Fundamental Duty; protecting the environment is a Fundamental Right

37. The single clearest difference between a Fundamental Right and a Directive Principle of State Policy is that:

- (A) a Directive Principle can be enforced in court, while a Right cannot
- (B) a Fundamental Right can be enforced in court, while a Directive Principle is a guiding goal that cannot be enforced there

- (C) both are equally enforceable in court
- (D) both are merely optional suggestions with no role at all

38. A town official is chosen directly by the people in a free and fair election. Which Preamble word does this scene best illustrate, and which word would be the WRONG label for it?

- (A) it illustrates Socialist; it would be wrong to call it Democratic
- (B) it illustrates Sovereign; it would be wrong to call it Republic
- (C) it illustrates Democratic; it would be wrong to call it Socialist
- (D) it illustrates Secular; it would be wrong to call it Democratic

39. A person claims, 'Because India is a Republic, its head of state must be a hereditary king or queen.' Why is this wrong?

- (A) a republic means the head of state is elected, which is the direct opposite of hereditary rule
- (B) nothing is wrong; a republic does mean rule by a royal family
- (C) a republic means rule by religious leaders rather than a royal family
- (D) a republic means India has no head of state at all

40. A government office treats requests from people of every religion in exactly the same way, favouring no faith and following no official religion of its own. This best illustrates which Preamble value, and which value is it NOT?

- (A) it illustrates Socialist; it is NOT Secular
- (B) it illustrates Sovereign; it is NOT Secular
- (C) it illustrates Secular; it is NOT Socialist
- (D) it illustrates Republic; it is NOT Democratic

41. 'Socialist' in the Preamble expresses an aim about the economy. Which government action fits this word best?

- (A) making sure one family becomes the richest in the country
- (B) working to reduce inequality so that wealth and opportunity are shared more fairly
- (C) banning all buying and selling of goods
- (D) removing the government from the economy entirely

42. A person argues, 'Secular means India is against religion.' Why is this a misconception?

- (A) secular actually means equal respect for all faiths and freedom to follow any religion, not opposition to religion
- (B) secular means the state actively promotes atheism
- (C) secular means only one chosen religion is permitted
- (D) secular means practising any religion is against the law

43. In a secular India, a citizen wishes to follow a faith that very few others practise. Which of the following would VIOLATE secularism?

- (A) allowing people of all faiths to worship freely
- (B) treating every religion with equal respect under the law
- (C) a rule forcing everyone in the country to follow one single official religion
- (D) letting a person change or leave their religion if they choose

44. Assertion: India is described as 'Sovereign'. Reason: India can decide its own internal and external matters free from any outside control. Which is correct?

- (A) Both the assertion and the reason are true, and the reason correctly explains the assertion
- (B) The assertion is true but the reason is false
- (C) The assertion is false but the reason is true
- (D) Both the assertion and the reason are false

45. Which pairing of a Preamble word with its meaning is CORRECT?

- (A) Sovereign — India must follow the orders of a foreign power
- (B) Republic — India is ruled by a hereditary monarch
- (C) Secular — India is opposed to all religions
- (D) Democratic — the people govern themselves and choose their rulers through free and fair elections

46. Which set of Preamble words describes the kind of STATE India is, rather than the goals it sets for its citizens?

- (A) Justice, Liberty, Equality, Fraternity
- (B) Sovereign, Socialist, Secular, Democratic, Republic
- (C) Sovereign, Justice, Republic, Liberty
- (D) Secular, Equality, Democratic, Fraternity

47. A court rules that a poor person and a wealthy person must be treated exactly alike under the law. Which Preamble goal does this most directly uphold?

- (A) Equality — equal status and equal treatment for all, without discrimination
- (B) Fraternity — a feeling of brotherhood among citizens
- (C) Liberty — freedom of thought, speech and worship
- (D) Sovereignty — the nation's freedom from outside control

48. A writer freely criticises a government policy and chooses her own religion to follow. Which Preamble goal most directly protects BOTH of these choices?

- (A) Justice — fair social, economic and political treatment
- (B) Liberty — the freedom to think, speak, believe and worship
- (C) Equality — equal status and opportunity for all
- (D) Fraternity — brotherhood and unity among citizens

49. A scheme helps a disadvantaged group gain fairer access to opportunities. This most directly advances which kind of Preamble goal?

- (A) punishment imposed on everyone regardless of fault
- (B) freedom reserved only for those who are already wealthy
- (C) the rule of whoever happens to be physically strongest
- (D) social and economic justice — fairer treatment and opportunity for those who were disadvantaged

50. Citizens of many different backgrounds live side by side with mutual respect and a shared sense of unity. Which Preamble goal does this best express, and which would be the WRONG label?

- (A) it expresses Sovereignty; it would be wrong to call it Fraternity
- (B) it expresses Liberty; it would be wrong to call it Equality
- (C) it expresses Justice; it would be wrong to call it Fraternity
- (D) it expresses Fraternity; it would be wrong to call it Sovereignty

51. Which statement correctly groups the Preamble's key words by what they describe?

- (A) Sovereign, Socialist, Secular, Democratic and Republic describe the STATE; Justice, Liberty, Equality and Fraternity describe the GOALS for citizens
- (B) all nine words describe only the head of state
- (C) the nine words are simply the names of the three organs of government
- (D) the nine words list India's neighbouring countries

52. Taken as a whole, the nine key words of the Preamble point toward what kind of nation?

- (A) a kingdom ruled by one hereditary family
- (B) a state with a single official religion all must follow
- (C) a country whose major decisions are controlled from abroad
- (D) a self-governing nation of free and equal citizens living in unity, fairness and freedom

53. The phrase 'We, the People of India' opens the Preamble. The deepest meaning this carries is that:

- (A) a foreign ruler wrote the Constitution and handed it to India
- (B) the Constitution's authority comes from the people of India, who gave it to themselves
- (C) a king graciously granted the Constitution to his subjects
- (D) only the government, not the people, holds power in India

54. Because the Constitution can be amended through a careful parliamentary process, it is best described as a:

- (A) fixed document that can never be altered once written
- (B) document rewritten completely and automatically every single year

- (C) document that any single official may change at will
- (D) living document that adapts to changing needs while still being changed only deliberately

55. A student says, 'Since the Constitution can be amended, anyone can change it easily at any time.' The best correction is that:

- (A) amendments are possible only through a careful process of debate in Parliament, so change is deliberate, not casual
- (B) the student is right; anyone can change it whenever they like
- (C) the Constitution actually cannot be amended at all
- (D) only a foreign ruler is permitted to amend the Constitution

56. Why is the ability to amend the Constitution considered a STRENGTH rather than a weakness?

- (A) it lets the Constitution stay relevant by adapting to changing needs, while still being changed only through a careful process
- (B) it lets the Constitution be discarded whenever it is inconvenient
- (C) it means the Constitution changes randomly with no debate
- (D) it lets a single official rewrite the whole document whenever they wish

57. Adding Fundamental Duties in 1976 and Panchayati Raj provisions in 1992 are best understood together as showing that the Constitution:

- (A) cannot respond to changing circumstances at all
- (B) was abolished and completely rewritten on each of those occasions
- (C) adapts to new needs over time through its careful amendment process
- (D) was copied wholesale from another country in those years

58. A citizen argues, 'Our Constitution is fixed forever and was handed to us by a foreign power.' Which correction is FULLY accurate?

- (A) it truly cannot be changed and did come from abroad
- (B) it is a living document that can be amended, and it was given by the people of India to themselves
- (C) it changes every day and was written by a king
- (D) it has no values or long-term goals of any kind

59. Considering the whole chapter, which single statement BEST sums up what the Constitution is for India?

- (A) a fixed foreign document that lists only punishments
- (B) a yearly budget showing how the government spends its money
- (C) the supreme, people-given, living rulebook that sets up the government, guarantees rights, lists duties and guides the nation's goals
- (D) a collection of folk songs with no legal force

60. If a citizen's Fundamental Right is violated by the government, the chapter says the citizen's special power is to go to court for a remedy. This court-enforceability is precisely what separates a Fundamental Right from a:

- (A) Fundamental Right of another kind, which equally cannot be enforced
- (B) Preamble keyword, which a citizen may enforce in court just like a right
- (C) Fundamental Duty, which a citizen may also claim in court against the government
- (D) Directive Principle, which guides the government's policy but cannot be claimed in court

Worked Solutions

1. (B) A constitution is the supreme rulebook that fixes powers, rights and limits beforehand and binds even the most powerful, which is exactly what the scenario shows. It cannot be rewritten at will by the strongest leader, because its whole purpose is to stand above any individual. It is not a roster of members' wealth, and it is agreed in advance precisely to prevent disputes, not drawn up only after one has broken out.

2. (A) The chapter describes the constitution as both the rulebook that sets up government and the statement of the nation's goals and values, so both (i) and (ii) are part of it. A budget is a yearly spending plan made under the constitution, not where values live; the structure of government is set by the constitution itself, not a foreign treaty; and these matters are fixed in the supreme document rather than re-decided yearly by whoever is in power.

3. (C) A constitution does not assign each citizen a personal job or career; that is the odd one out. It does set up the three organs of government with checks and balances, guarantee enforceable rights, and state the nation's goals and values, all of which are genuine functions described in the chapter.

4. (D) The constitution provides the agreed limits on power and the guaranteed rights; removing it removes exactly those, so power can be exercised unpredictably. It does not trigger an automatic equal division of wealth, free and fair elections need rules that only a constitution supplies (so they would not arise on their own), and the absence of a constitution increases the danger of unchecked rule rather than removing the need for government.

5. (A) Because even the most powerful officials must pledge to uphold it, the Constitution clearly stands above every individual and binds them especially. It does not bind only ordinary citizens; the official pledge shows the opposite. It is in force every day, not only on Republic Day, and the binding pledge proves it is far from a merely ceremonial text.

6. (B) A constitution is a nation's own supreme document covering its principles, the structure of its government, and citizens' rights and duties; it is not an agreement signed with foreign powers. It is not a trade treaty, not a yearly spending account (that is a budget made under the constitution), and not a songbook; each of these describes a completely different kind of document.

7. (D) A constitution is needed to agree powers, rights and limits beforehand, providing a stable framework everyone can rely on. It has nothing to do with making a country the largest by area; laws still continue to be made within the framework, so it does not end law-making; and far from freeing government from limits, its purpose is to set limits on government power.

8. (D) A multi-member body working for about three years points to a careful, deliberate process. That contradicts the idea of one person writing it in a single sitting. The Indian Constituent Assembly did the work, not the British Parliament, and a long original debate is the opposite of an unchanged copy of one foreign country.

9. (C) About 299 members including women indicates a sizeable and diverse assembly, so the Constitution reflects many voices and a varied nation. It was not framed by a tiny all-male handful, nor by foreign representatives (it was an Indian assembly), and a diverse membership argues against the idea that it served only the wealthy.

10. (B) Prasad chaired the entire Constituent Assembly and Ambedkar led the Drafting Committee that prepared the actual text; these are the two distinct roles. Swapping them is wrong, they did not co-head one committee, and Ambedkar headed the drafting work as an Indian member, not as a foreign adviser.

11. (B) Adoption on 26 Nov 1949 and coming into force on 26 Jan 1950 are two distinct stages: first the text was accepted, then it became operative law. The text was accepted, not rejected, in 1949; neither date marks Independence (which was 15 Aug 1947); and the dates differ precisely because the two stages were not on the same day.

12. (A) Independence Day (15 Aug 1947) and Republic Day (26 Jan 1950, the Constitution coming into force) commemorate two separate events. India became free in 1947, not 1950; the two dates are not interchangeable and are not swapped (Independence is in August, the Constitution came into force in January); and neither marks the Assembly's formation, which was in 1946.

13. (D) The true order is 1946 (Assembly formed), 1947 (Independence), 1949 (adopted), 1950 (came into force). The other sequences jumble the years: 1946 must precede 1947, adoption in 1949 cannot come before the Assembly was even formed, and listing 1950 first reverses the whole timeline.

14. (A) India became a republic the day the Constitution took effect, 26 Jan 1950, so that date is celebrated; the Assembly's formation in 1946 merely began the drafting. The Assembly was not formed on 26 January, Independence was 15 Aug 1947 (not a republic-becoming event), and adoption and coming into force did not happen on the day the Assembly was formed.

15. (D) A diverse Indian assembly working carefully over years, shaped by the freedom struggle and India's heritage, shows the Constitution was Indian-made, deliberate and value-rooted. It was not hurried or written by outsiders, not a direct copy of one foreign country (it borrowed selectively), and not a monarch's decree, since 'We, the People' gave it to themselves.

16. (C) Liberty and equality came from the freedom struggle, deep values from India's civilisational heritage, and the parliamentary system was studied from Britain — one example per influence, in order. The other options pair the influences with things the chapter rejects or never mentions: monarchy and foreign decrees, British-Parliament orders, and budgets or songbooks, none of which are the three influences.

17. (B) Drawing different features from Britain, the USA and Ireland is selective, adaptive borrowing, not wholesale copying of any one nation. It did not copy Britain entirely, did not take everything from the USA, and did not refuse to study others or invent everything from scratch — the very examples show study of several countries.

18. (D) Sovereignty means India decides its own affairs free from outside control, so it need not scrap a law merely because a neighbour demands it. Secular concerns equal respect for faiths, Socialist concerns reducing economic inequality, and Republic concerns having an elected head of state — none of these is about freedom from foreign interference in India's laws.

19. (B) It is true India did not copy one country, and the reason — selective study and adaptation blended with Indian values — is exactly why, so the reason correctly explains the assertion. The reason is not false (the chapter describes this selective borrowing), and the assertion is not false either, so the options denying their truth are wrong.

20. (A) The freedom movement was a struggle for liberty and equality, and the Constitution wrote those very values into itself. A hereditary monarch contradicts the republican aim, banning elections contradicts the democratic aim, and handing decisions to a foreign authority contradicts the sovereignty India fought to win.

21. (C) The chapter pairs the parliamentary system with Britain, the idea of Fundamental Rights and judicial review with the USA, and Directive Principles with Ireland. The other options scramble these sources, attaching features to the wrong countries or to countries (France, Japan) not credited with those particular borrowings.

22. (C) Borrowing selected ideas and adapting them, while rooting the document in India's own struggle and heritage, makes the Constitution Indian. Borrowing does not make it foreign, it was written by the Indian Constituent Assembly rather than foreign experts, and it is false that India borrowed nothing — the chapter clearly describes selective borrowing.

23. (A) Distinct roles plus the judiciary's power to strike down unconstitutional laws is exactly separation of powers with checks and balances. The organs are kept separate, not merged; the judiciary does not make or enforce laws (the legislature makes and the executive enforces); and they clearly do limit one another, so 'never influence one another' is wrong.

24. (C) The Constitution divides power among the three organs and arranges checks so each limits the others, preventing dangerous concentration. Merging powers into one office creates the very danger being guarded against, letting the executive control the others removes the check, and removing all rules would leave power totally unchecked — the opposite of the safeguard.

25. (D) The Constitution is supreme over every individual, so even a Prime Minister must obey it. It cannot be overruled by whoever holds the most power — that would defeat its supremacy. It binds officials especially (they take a pledge to uphold it), and it is in force every day, not just on Republic Day.

26. (D) As the supreme law, the Constitution prevails, so a conflicting law can be struck down. The Constitution does not bend automatically to a new law, the conflict does not cancel both, and being more recent does not let an ordinary law override the Constitution — supremacy means the Constitution stands above ordinary legislation.

27. (D) Supremacy means every other law must agree with the Constitution and even the most powerful officials are bound by it. Its supremacy is not about page length or being read at ceremonies, and the idea of supremacy directly rules out its being set aside by whoever is powerful.

28. (C) Sharing powers between the centre and the states is the meaning of a federal structure. It is not a single all-powerful government with no states, nor a system where states have everything and the centre nothing — federalism balances the two — and it is certainly not rule by one religious leader.

29. (A) Separation plus mutual checks exists to prevent any organ from abusing power, which protects citizens. Slowness for its own sake is not the aim, giving one organ complete control would destroy the balance the design creates, and the arrangement supports law-making within limits rather than removing the need for laws.

30. (C) Fundamental Rights are enforceable in court, so going to court to protect a violated right is a right in action. Planting trees and respecting the National Flag are Fundamental Duties of citizens, and framing an anti-poverty policy reflects a Directive Principle guiding the government, not the exercise of an enforceable right.

31. (A) A government aim that courts cannot enforce is the hallmark of a Directive Principle. A Fundamental Right could be enforced in court, so it would not fit 'cannot be challenged'; a Fundamental Duty is a citizen's responsibility, not a government scheme; and the Preamble's keywords are in fact connected to the nation's goals, so that option is wrong.

32. (B) Rights are enforceable protections, Duties are citizens' responsibilities, and Directive Principles are non-enforceable guides for government — each is distinct. Not all three are enforceable alike (only Rights are), Rights and Duties are not swapped, and it is the Rights that are enforceable while the Principles are guiding goals — the reverse of the last option.

33. (B) Respecting the Flag and protecting the environment and public property are responsibilities of citizens, i.e. Fundamental Duties. They are not Fundamental Rights (which are claims enforced in court), Directive Principles guide the government rather than being 'binding on courts', and these duties belong to all citizens, not to ministers alone.

34. (C) Directive Principles purposefully steer government policy and law-making, so they matter even without court enforcement. The student is wrong that they are useless; they cannot be claimed in court like Rights (that is what 'unenforceable' means); and they are aimed at the State's policy, not at obligations on individual citizens.

35. (B) Adding Fundamental Duties in 1976 shows the Constitution can be amended as needs change — a living document. It was amended, not rejected and rewritten from scratch; an occasional amendment is nothing like a yearly complete rewrite; and the Duties came through India's own amendment process, not a foreign decree.

36. (C) Freedom of speech is a Fundamental Right a citizen can enforce, while protecting the environment is a Fundamental Duty, a responsibility of citizens. They are not both Rights, not both Duties, and the two are not swapped — speech is the right and environmental protection is the duty.

37. (B) Rights are court-enforceable while Directive Principles guide the government but cannot be enforced in court — that is the key contrast. Reversing this is wrong, they are not equally enforceable (only Rights are), and Directive Principles are not pointless suggestions — they shape government policy even though courts do not enforce them.

38. (C) People choosing their leaders through free and fair elections is the meaning of Democratic, so 'Socialist' (which is about reducing economic inequality) would be the wrong label. The other options misname the scene: it is not chiefly about Sovereignty (freedom from outside control) or Secularism (equal respect for faiths), and pairing it with Secular as the right label is also incorrect.

39. (A) A republic means the head of state is elected, not inherited, so hereditary royal rule directly contradicts it. The statement is therefore wrong, not correct; a republic is not rule by religious leaders; and it certainly does not mean having no head of state.

40. (C) Treating all faiths alike with no official religion is the practice of secularism, so it is not Socialist (which concerns reducing economic inequality). The other options misidentify the scene: it is about religion, not the nation's independence (Sovereign) or having an elected head of state (Republic).

41. (B) Socialist points to lessening inequality so wealth and opportunity are spread more fairly. Helping one family become richest would increase inequality, the opposite of the aim; it does not mean banning all trade; and it does not mean removing government from the economy — that misreads the word.

42. (A) Secular means treating all faiths with equal respect and letting people freely follow any religion; it is not against religion. The state does not push atheism, it does not permit only one religion, and far from making religion illegal, secularism protects the freedom to practise one's faith.

43. (C) Forcing everyone into one official religion destroys equal respect and religious freedom, so it violates secularism. Allowing all faiths to worship, treating every religion equally, and letting people change or leave a faith all uphold secularism rather than breaking it.

44. (A) India is indeed Sovereign, and the reason — deciding its own affairs free from outside control — is exactly what sovereignty means, so the reason correctly explains the assertion. The reason is not false (it is the definition of sovereign), and the assertion is not false either, so the options denying their truth are wrong.

45. (D) Democratic correctly means self-rule by the people through elections. Sovereign means freedom from outside control, so saying India must obey a foreign power reverses it; Republic means an elected head of state, not a hereditary monarch; and Secular means equal respect for all faiths, not opposition to religion.

46. (B) Sovereign, Socialist, Secular, Democratic and Republic together describe the nature of the Indian state. Justice, Liberty, Equality and Fraternity describe the goals set for citizens, so that group is wrong, and the mixed lists wrongly blend state-describing words with citizen-goal words.

47. (A) Treating rich and poor alike under the law is the essence of Equality — equal status without discrimination. Fraternity is a spirit of brotherhood, Liberty is about freedoms of thought and worship, and Sovereignty concerns the nation's independence — none of these is the point of treating two persons equally before the law.

48. (B) Speaking freely and choosing one's religion are both protected by Liberty — the freedom of thought, expression, belief and worship. Justice is about fair treatment across society, Equality about equal status and opportunity, and Fraternity about a spirit of brotherhood — none of these is specifically the freedom to express oneself and worship as one chooses.

49. (D) Helping a disadvantaged group gain fair access to opportunity is social and economic justice — fairness across society. Justice does not mean punishing everyone, it is not freedom reserved for the wealthy, and it is not rule by the strongest; all three contradict the idea of fairness for all that justice stands for.

50. (D) A spirit of brotherhood and unity among citizens of different backgrounds is Fraternity, so 'Sovereignty' (the nation's freedom from outside control) would be the wrong label. The other options mislabel the scene: it is about unity among citizens, not chiefly about Liberty, Equality or Justice, and calling it Justice misses the point of brotherhood.

51. (A) The first five words describe the kind of state India is, while the last four describe the goals the Constitution sets for citizens — that is the correct grouping. The nine words are not all about the head of state, they are not the names of the three organs (legislature, executive, judiciary), and they are certainly not the names of neighbouring countries.

52. (D) Sovereign, democratic and republican self-rule together with justice, liberty, equality and fraternity describe a free, equal and united self-governing nation. A hereditary kingdom contradicts 'republic' and 'democratic', a single compulsory religion contradicts 'secular', and foreign control contradicts 'sovereign'.

53. (B) 'We, the People' declares that the people of India are the source of the Constitution's authority and gave it to themselves. It was not written by a foreign ruler, not granted by a king, and it roots power in the people rather than handing it solely to the government.

54. (D) Being amendable through a careful process makes the Constitution a living document that adapts yet changes only deliberately. It is not unchangeable, it is not rewritten completely every year, and no single official can change it at will — amendments require rigorous parliamentary debate.

55. (A) Amendment is possible but must pass through rigorous parliamentary debate, so change is deliberate, not casual or open to anyone. The student is therefore wrong; the Constitution can be amended, so 'cannot be amended at all' is false; and no foreign ruler controls Indian amendments.

56. (A) Amendment is a strength because it keeps the Constitution relevant over time, yet change comes only through a deliberate process, balancing stability and flexibility. It does not allow casual discarding, it is not random or debate-free, and no single official can rewrite it at will.

57. (C) Both the 1976 and 1992 changes show the Constitution adjusting to new needs through amendment. This contradicts the idea that it cannot respond to change; it was amended, not abolished and rewritten each time; and the changes came through India's own process, not by copying another country.

58. (B) Both halves of the citizen's claim are wrong: the Constitution can be amended (a living document) and arose from the people of India themselves, as 'We, the People' declares. It is not unchangeable or foreign-imposed, it does not change daily or come from a king, and it plainly sets out values and goals in its Preamble.

59. (C) The Constitution is the supreme rulebook the people gave themselves, capable of amendment, which establishes government, secures rights, sets duties and guides national goals — the full picture from the chapter. It is not a fixed foreign list of punishments, not a yearly budget, and not a songbook; each misses what the Constitution actually is.

60. (D) What sets a Fundamental Right apart is that it can be enforced in court, unlike a Directive Principle, which only guides government policy and cannot be claimed there. Another Fundamental Right is also court-enforceable, so it does not contrast; Preamble keywords are not things a citizen enforces in court; and a Fundamental Duty is a responsibility of the citizen, not a claim the citizen brings against the government in court.
