Chapter 10: The Constitution of India — An Introduction

Paper 5 — (progressively harder)

Subject	Social Science (NCERT Class 7)
Chapter	10 — The Constitution of India — An Introduction
Total Questions	60 (Multiple Choice, single correct)
Maximum Marks	240
Suggested Time	90 minutes

Marking scheme: +4 for each correct answer · -1 for each wrong answer · 0 if unattempted.

Instructions: Each question has four options (A), (B), (C), (D); exactly one is correct. Apex traps: distinguish adoption (26 Nov 1949) from coming-into-force (26 Jan 1950) from Independence (15 Aug 1947) under reordered scenarios; never confuse 'secular' (equal respect, no state religion) with anti-religion or single-religion; hold Fundamental Rights (court-enforceable) vs Directive Principles (guide government, not enforceable) vs Fundamental Duties (citizens' responsibilities) apart even when a scenario blends two; resist 'India copied one country' (it adapted selectively from many) and 'fixed forever / foreign-given' (living, people-given); match each borrowed feature to the RIGHT source (parliamentary-Britain, Rights/judicial-review-USA, Directive Principles-Ireland) without crossing wires; separate 'describes the STATE' words from 'goals for citizens' words; and tell checks-and-balances from a merger of organs. Do not write on this paper — mark answers on your answer sheet.

1. A council writes a single supreme document that (i) fixes how leaders are chosen, (ii) lists members' enforceable rights, (iii) names the council's long-term aims, and (iv) binds even its most powerful officer. A critic says 'three of these belong in a constitution, but one does not.' Which item, if any, does the critic wrongly think is out of place — given what a constitution actually does?

- (A) Stating long-term aims is out of place, because a constitution only lists procedures and never values
- (B) None is out of place; a constitution does all four — sets the rules for choosing and limiting leaders, guarantees rights, and states long-term aims

- (C) Binding the most powerful officer is out of place, because top officials stand above the constitution
- (D) Guaranteeing enforceable rights is out of place, because rights belong only in a yearly budget

2. Imagine a country that keeps a written constitution but lets whoever currently holds the most power rewrite it overnight without debate. Which single feature of the Indian Constitution does this imagined country most directly LACK?

- (A) A Preamble, since a constitution without a Preamble cannot exist at all
- (B) Fundamental Duties, since duties are what stop powerful people from acting
- (C) Supremacy combined with a deliberate amendment process, so that change is possible only through careful debate and no individual stands above the document
- (D) A federal split of powers, since only federalism prevents rewriting

3. A judge, a minister and an ordinary citizen are each asked, 'Are you bound by the Constitution?' For the system the chapter describes to work, the correct answers must be:

- (A) Yes for the citizen only; officials may set the Constitution aside when they judge it necessary
- (B) Yes for the judge and minister only; ordinary citizens are governed by separate rules
- (C) Yes only on Republic Day; on other days no one is bound by it
- (D) Yes, yes and yes — the Constitution stands above every individual, so officials and citizens alike are bound by it

4. Four events are listed with deliberately scrambled labels: 'P = the text was finally accepted (adopted)', 'Q = the text became operative law (came into force)', 'R = the drafting body first met', 'S = British rule ended'. Using the chapter's dates, the correct EARLIEST-to-LATEST order of these letters is:

- | | |
|----------------|----------------|

5. A student reasons: 'India became a republic the day the Constituent Assembly first met, because that is when constitution-making began.' Identify the exact flaw in this reasoning.

- (A) India became a republic only when the Constitution came into force on 26 January 1950; the Assembly first meeting in 1946 merely began the drafting, not republic status
- (B) India became a republic on 15 August 1947, so the flaw is using 1946 instead of the independence date
- (C) There is no flaw, because the day the Assembly met and Republic Day are the same date
- (D) India became a republic when the text was adopted in 1949, so the only flaw is the year

6. After Partition the Assembly's membership settled at about 299, it worked for roughly three years, and it included members from many communities and several women. A historian draws ONE conclusion that all three facts together best support. Which is it?

- (A) A sizeable, diverse body deliberated carefully over years, so the Constitution reflects a broad range of voices rather than one group's wishes
- (B) A single individual wrote the whole Constitution in a short time
- (C) The Constitution was the product of one region of India alone
- (D) Foreign representatives drafted the document on India's behalf

7. Two leaders are described: Leader X presided over the entire Constituent Assembly; Leader Y headed the committee that actually wrote the draft text. A quiz then asks for the pairing 'X then Y'. The correct pairing is:

- (A) Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, then Dr. Rajendra Prasad
- (B) Jawaharlal Nehru, then Dr. B. R. Ambedkar
- (C) Dr. Rajendra Prasad, then Sardar Patel
- (D) Dr. Rajendra Prasad, then Dr. B. R. Ambedkar

8. A debater claims: 'Because India studied the constitutions of other countries, our Constitution is really just a foreign copy and not Indian.' Which reply best dismantles BOTH halves of this claim at once?

- (A) India copied Britain's constitution word for word, but added an Indian Preamble, so it is half-Indian
- (B) India borrowed nothing from any other country, so the claim is baseless on its face
- (C) India did copy a foreign country, but a copy made in India still counts as Indian
- (D) India studied many constitutions and adapted only what suited it, then wove these with its own freedom-struggle and civilisational values — so it copied no single country and the result is genuinely Indian

9. Match three borrowed features to their main source countries: parliamentary system; Fundamental Rights with judicial review; Directive Principles. Then identify which option lists them in that exact order WITHOUT crossing any wires.

- | | |
|---------------------------|---------------------------|
| (A) USA; Britain; Ireland | (B) Britain; USA; Ireland |
| (C) Britain; Ireland; USA | (D) Ireland; USA; Britain |

10. A neighbouring state demands India repeal an internal law AND simultaneously demands India hand over the choosing of its President to a foreign panel. A citizen says the Preamble already answers BOTH demands with one word. Which word, and why?

- (A) Republic — because an elected head of state means foreign panels are simply slower, not barred
- (B) Democratic — because elections decide laws, so neighbours cannot demand repeals
- (C) Secular — because treating religions equally also blocks foreign demands
- (D) Sovereign — India alone has the supreme right to decide its own internal and external matters free from outside control, which covers both its laws and its choice of head of state

11. Three scenes occur: (1) a citizen wins a court order forcing the government to stop violating her freedom; (2) a citizen plants trees because she feels a responsibility to the nation; (3) the government frames a poverty-reduction policy that no court can compel it to fully achieve. The three scenes illustrate, in order:

- (A) A Fundamental Right; a Fundamental Duty; a Directive Principle of State Policy
- (B) A Directive Principle; a Fundamental Right; a Fundamental Duty
- (C) A Fundamental Duty; a Directive Principle; a Fundamental Right
- (D) A Fundamental Right; a Directive Principle; a Fundamental Duty

12. A student writes: 'Directive Principles must be the most powerful part of the Constitution, because the government must follow them.' What is the precise correction?

- (A) Directive Principles can be enforced in court exactly like Fundamental Rights, so the student is correct
- (B) Directive Principles are duties of citizens, so they have no bearing on the government at all
- (C) Directive Principles override Fundamental Rights whenever the two clash, confirming they are most powerful
- (D) Directive Principles guide the government when it frames laws and policies, but they cannot be enforced in court, so they are not 'most powerful' over the court-enforceable Fundamental Rights

13. Consider three statements. (i) Fundamental Duties were added in 1976. (ii) Panchayati Raj provisions were added in 1992. (iii) The Constitution can never be changed once written. Which combination is internally consistent with the chapter?

- (A) All three are true, because additions in 1976 and 1992 do not count as changes
- (B) (i) and (ii) are true and (iii) is false; the very fact that provisions were added later shows the Constitution is a living document
- (C) Only (iii) is true; the 1976 and 1992 additions never actually happened
- (D) (i) is true but (ii) and (iii) are both false, because nothing was added in 1992

14. A citizen argues that the power to amend the Constitution is a dangerous weakness because it lets the document be discarded on a whim. Which response both corrects the misconception AND explains why amendment is a strength?

- (A) Amendment is a strength because it lets the Constitution stay relevant to changing needs, while still being changed only through a careful, debated parliamentary process — not on a whim
- (B) Amendment is indeed a weakness, since any provision can be removed instantly whenever it is inconvenient
- (C) Amendment is a strength only because it allows a single official to update the text quickly
- (D) Amendment is irrelevant, because the Constitution has in fact never been amended

15. A government office treats people of every faith identically, declares no official religion, and lets each citizen worship as they choose. A student labels this 'the state being against religion'. The best correction names the value AND the misconception in one stroke:

- (A) This is socialism — sharing wealth fairly — and the student wrongly calls economic fairness anti-religion
- (B) This is the state promoting atheism, so the student's anti-religion label is correct
- (C) This is the state imposing one official religion, which the student mislabels as anti-religion
- (D) This is secularism — equal respect for all faiths and freedom of religion — and the student wrongly equates secular with being anti-religion

16. Which single hypothetical rule would, by itself, VIOLATE Indian secularism most clearly?

- (A) A rule letting citizens of all faiths worship freely
- (B) A rule allowing a person to change or leave their religion
- (C) A rule requiring every citizen to follow one official state religion
- (D) A rule that government offices treat all religions equally

17. A town official is chosen by the people in a free and fair election; the town also celebrates many faiths equally. A quiz asks which Preamble word the ELECTION best shows and which word would be the WRONG label for that same election.

- (A) It best shows Democratic; calling it Secular would be the wrong label
- (B) It best shows Secular; calling it Democratic would be the wrong label
- (C) It best shows Republic; calling it Sovereign would be the wrong label
- (D) It best shows Socialist; calling it Democratic would be the wrong label

18. Sort the nine Preamble key words into 'describes the kind of STATE India is' versus 'goals India sets for its citizens'. Which option places EVERY word in the correct group?

- (A) State: Justice, Liberty, Equality, Fraternity — Goals: Sovereign, Socialist, Secular, Democratic, Republic
- (B) State: Sovereign, Socialist, Secular, Democratic, Republic — Goals: Justice, Liberty, Equality, Fraternity
- (C) State: Sovereign, Justice, Republic, Liberty — Goals: Socialist, Secular, Democratic, Equality, Fraternity
- (D) State: Democratic, Secular, Justice, Fraternity — Goals: Sovereign, Socialist, Republic, Liberty, Equality

19. Assertion: India did not simply copy any one country's constitution. Reason: The Constituent Assembly studied many constitutions, took only what suited India, and combined these with India's own values. Choose the correct evaluation.

- (A) Both are true, but the reason does not explain the assertion
- (B) The assertion is true but the reason is false

- (C) Both the assertion and the reason are true, and the reason correctly explains the assertion
- (D) The assertion is false but the reason is true

20. A legislature passes a law; the executive begins enforcing it; a court then finds the law conflicts with the Constitution. Which chain of outcomes follows from the Constitution being the supreme law?

- (A) The Constitution must be amended automatically to match the new law, and the law stands
- (B) The court can strike the law down, because no ordinary law may override the Constitution, and the executive must then stop enforcing it
- (C) The newer law prevails because it was passed more recently than the Constitution
- (D) Both the law and the Constitution are cancelled together and must be rewritten

21. A reformer proposes merging the legislature, executive and judiciary into one body 'to make decisions faster'. Using the chapter's reasoning, the strongest objection is that this would:

- (A) Slow government down even further, defeating the reformer's stated purpose
- (B) Violate secularism by giving one religion control of all three organs
- (C) Break the federal split between the central and state governments only
- (D) Remove the checks the organs place on one another, concentrating power in one place and endangering citizens' rights

22. A citizen exercises freedom of speech, separately fulfils a responsibility to safeguard public property, and benefits from a government scheme aimed at reducing inequality. Classify these three, in order, as Right / Duty / Principle.

- (A) Freedom of speech is a Directive Principle; safeguarding public property is a Right; the scheme is a Duty
- (B) Freedom of speech is a Fundamental Right; safeguarding public property is a Fundamental Duty; the inequality-reducing scheme rests on a Directive Principle
- (C) Freedom of speech is a Duty; safeguarding public property is a Principle; the scheme is a Right
- (D) All three are Fundamental Rights enforceable in court in the same way

23. A scheme gives a long-disadvantaged group fairer access to schooling and jobs; the courts cannot compel the government to complete it. The scheme advances which Preamble goal, and it is grounded in which kind of provision?

- (A) It advances social and economic Justice, and it is grounded in a Directive Principle, which guides the government but is not court-enforceable
- (B) It advances Liberty, and it is grounded in a Fundamental Right enforceable in court
- (C) It advances Fraternity, and it is grounded in a Fundamental Duty of citizens
- (D) It advances Equality, and it is grounded in a Preamble keyword that courts must enforce

24. A teacher draws a timeline and asks: between which two consecutive events did the LONGEST gap occur, among 'Assembly first met', 'Independence', 'Constitution adopted', and 'came into force'?

- (A) Between the Constitution being adopted (1949) and coming into force (1950) — about two years
- (B) Between the Assembly first meeting (1946) and Independence (1947) — about three years
- (C) Between coming into force (1950) and the Assembly first meeting (1946) — only a few months
- (D) Between Independence (1947) and the Constitution being adopted (1949) — about two years

25. Which statement BEST captures the difference between 'adopting' the Constitution and the Constitution 'coming into force'?

- (A) Adopting and coming into force are two names for the very same event on the same day
- (B) Adopting meant rejecting the text in 1949, and coming into force meant rewriting it in 1950
- (C) Adopting meant the Assembly accepted the final text in 1949; coming into force meant the text became operative law in 1950 — acceptance and operation are separate stages
- (D) Adopting happened in 1950 and coming into force happened in 1949

26. A citizen says, 'Republic Day on 26 January celebrates the day India became free from Britain.' Which correction is fully accurate?

- (A) Freedom from Britain came on 15 August 1947; 26 January 1950 marks the Constitution coming into force and India becoming a republic — different events
- (B) Both 15 August and 26 January celebrate the same freedom, so the citizen is right
- (C) 26 January marks freedom from Britain and 15 August marks the Constitution coming into force
- (D) India became free in 1950, so Republic Day correctly marks freedom

27. A foreign company asserts it will set India's defence policy; a citizen replies the Preamble forbids this. A second company then asserts India must adopt that company's official religion as the nation's faith; the citizen says a DIFFERENT Preamble idea forbids this. The two ideas the citizen uses are, in order:

- (A) Sovereign (for the defence-policy demand) and Secular (for the official-religion demand)
- (B) Secular (for the defence-policy demand) and Sovereign (for the official-religion demand)

- (C) Republic (for the defence-policy demand) and Democratic (for the official-religion demand)
- (D) Socialist (for the defence-policy demand) and Republic (for the official-religion demand)

28. A writer freely criticises a government policy in print and also chooses, on her own, which faith to follow. Which SINGLE Preamble goal most directly protects BOTH actions together?

- (A) Equality — equal status and opportunity for all citizens
- (B) Liberty — the freedom to think, speak, believe and worship
- (C) Fraternity — a feeling of brotherhood and unity among citizens
- (D) Justice — fair social, economic and political treatment

29. A court rules that a wealthy person and a poor person must be treated exactly alike under the law, with neither favoured. Which Preamble goal does this most directly uphold, and which goal would be the WRONG label for it?

- (A) It upholds Liberty; calling it Equality would be the wrong label
- (B) It upholds Fraternity; calling it Sovereignty would be the wrong label
- (C) It upholds Sovereignty; calling it Justice would be the wrong label
- (D) It upholds Equality; calling it Liberty would be the wrong label

30. Citizens of many different backgrounds live side by side with mutual respect and a shared sense of belonging to one nation. Which Preamble goal does this best express, and which is the LEAST related to it?

- (A) It best expresses Sovereignty; Fraternity is the least related
- (B) It best expresses Fraternity; Sovereignty is the least related
- (C) It best expresses Equality; Liberty is the least related
- (D) It best expresses Justice; Fraternity is the least related

31. Taken as a whole, the nine key words of the Preamble point toward what kind of nation?

- (A) A kingdom in which one hereditary family rules permanently
- (B) A state with a single official religion that all citizens must follow
- (C) A country whose most important decisions are controlled from abroad
- (D) A self-governing nation of free and equal citizens living in unity, fairness and freedom

32. The Preamble opens 'We, the People of India'. A student says this proves the British monarch generously granted India its Constitution. The deepest correct meaning is instead that:

- (A) A foreign ruler wrote the Constitution and then handed it to the people of India
- (B) Only the government, and not the people, holds the power expressed in the Constitution

- (C) The phrase is purely decorative and carries no meaning about where authority comes from
- (D) The Constitution's authority comes from the people of India, who gave it to themselves — not from any ruler granting it to them

33. A student asserts the Constitution is 'fixed forever and was handed to us by a foreign power.' Which single correction repairs BOTH errors at once?

- (A) It truly cannot be changed, but it was at least written by Indians rather than foreigners
- (B) It can be amended freely by anyone at any time, and it was indeed granted by a foreign power
- (C) It is a living document that can be amended through a careful process, and it was given by the people of India to themselves
- (D) It changes every single day, and it was written by a hereditary king

34. Which statement BEST explains WHY the Constitution is treated as the supreme law of the land, rather than merely an important book?

- (A) Because every other law must conform to it and even the government and its officials are bound by it
- (B) Because it is the longest legal book ever printed in India
- (C) Because it is read aloud at every official ceremony in the country
- (D) Because whoever holds the most power may set it aside at will

35. A debater claims India's federal split between centre and states means the centre can be ignored by any state at any time. The accurate description of the federal arrangement is:

- (A) The states hold every power and the centre holds none, so states may ignore the centre
- (B) There is a single government with no states beneath it, so the question cannot arise
- (C) Powers are shared between the central and state governments under the Constitution; it is a division of powers, not a licence for states to ignore the centre
- (D) One authority holds all power, leaving neither true centre nor true states

36. A citizen's Fundamental Right is violated by the government, and she wins a court remedy. The chapter says this court-enforceability is exactly what separates a Fundamental Right from a Directive Principle. Which scenario, by contrast, shows the LIMIT of that court power?

- (A) A poverty-reduction goal the government has not fully met cannot be enforced in court, because it is a Directive Principle, not a Right
- (B) A citizen's freedom of speech being protected by a court order, because that too is unenforceable

- (C) A citizen respecting the National Flag, because flag-respect can be claimed in court like a Right
- (D) A neighbour's demand that India change a law, because such demands are court-enforceable

37. Assertion: The Constitution can be changed over time. Reason: It is a living document amended only through a careful parliamentary process, as seen with Fundamental Duties in 1976 and Panchayati Raj in 1992. Choose the correct evaluation.

- (A) Both the assertion and the reason are true, and the reason correctly explains the assertion
- (B) Both are true, but the reason does not explain the assertion
- (C) The assertion is true but the reason is false
- (D) The assertion is false but the reason is true

38. Four claims are made about the Constituent Assembly. Exactly one is FALSE. Which one?

- (A) It was formed in 1946, before India became independent
- (B) After Partition its membership settled at about 299
- (C) It was formed in 1950, the same year the Constitution came into force
- (D) It included several women members

39. Which pairing of a Preamble word with its meaning is the ONLY correct one?

- (A) Sovereign — India must obey the orders of a foreign power
- (B) Republic — India is ruled by a hereditary monarch
- (C) Democratic — the people govern themselves and choose their rulers through free and fair elections
- (D) Secular — India is opposed to all religions

40. A student maps the three great influences on the Constitution to one example each. Which option correctly lists an example of the freedom struggle, then India's civilisational heritage, then learnings from other countries — in that order?

- (A) The goal of liberty and equality fought for in the freedom movement; values drawn from India's long civilisational past; the parliamentary system studied from Britain
- (B) The parliamentary system studied from Britain; the goal of liberty fought for in the freedom movement; values from India's civilisational past
- (C) Values from India's civilisational past; the parliamentary system from Britain; the goal of equality from the freedom movement
- (D) A foreign king's decree; a yearly budget; a collection of folk songs

41. A citizen claims, 'Because India is a Republic, its head of state must be a hereditary king or queen.' The precise reason this is wrong is that:

- (A) A republic means rule by religious leaders rather than by a royal family
- (B) A republic means India has no head of state at all

- (C) Nothing is wrong; a republic does indeed mean rule by a royal family
- (D) A republic means the head of state is elected, which is the direct opposite of hereditary rule

42. 'Socialist' in the Preamble expresses an economic aim. Which government action fits it best, and which action would clearly CONTRADICT it?

- (A) It fits banning all buying and selling; it contradicts reducing inequality
- (B) It fits making one family the richest; it contradicts sharing opportunity fairly
- (C) It fits working to reduce inequality so wealth and opportunity are shared more fairly; it contradicts deliberately making one family the richest in the country
- (D) It fits removing the government from the economy entirely; it contradicts any fairness aim

43. A government frames a policy to provide fair wages but a court cannot force it to fully succeed; separately, a citizen wins a court order stopping unlawful detention. These two scenes differ chiefly because the first rests on a ___ and the second on a ___.

- (A) Fundamental Right (court-enforceable); Directive Principle (guides government, not court-enforceable)
- (B) Fundamental Duty (citizen's responsibility); Fundamental Right (court-enforceable)
- (C) Directive Principle (guides government, not court-enforceable); Fundamental Right (court-enforceable)
- (D) Directive Principle (court-enforceable); Fundamental Duty (citizen's responsibility)

44. Which one of the following does a constitution NOT do, making it the odd one out?

- (A) Set up the legislature, executive and judiciary and arrange checks among them
- (B) Decide the personal career and daily job of each individual citizen
- (C) Guarantee rights that citizens can defend in the courts
- (D) State the nation's long-term goals and core values

45. A class debates which date 'truly made India a republic'. The strongest defensible answer, with reason, is:

- (A) 26 November 1949, because adopting the text is the same as becoming a republic
- (B) 15 August 1947, because independence and becoming a republic are the same event
- (C) The 1946 date, because the day the Assembly met is when republic status began
- (D) 26 January 1950, because that is when the Constitution came into force and India actually became a republic

46. A student lists 'duties of citizens' and includes one item that actually belongs elsewhere. Which item is misplaced?

- (A) Showing respect for the National Flag and the National Anthem
- (B) Protecting the natural environment
- (C) Safeguarding public property
- (D) Approaching a court to protect a right the government has violated

47. Why is Republic Day chosen to celebrate India becoming a republic, rather than the day the Constituent Assembly first met?

- (A) Because the Assembly met on 26 January, which is the same as becoming a republic
- (B) Because 26 January 1950 is when the Constitution came into force, actually making India a republic, whereas 1946 only began the drafting body
- (C) Because India became independent on 26 January, and independence is what 'republic' means
- (D) Because the Constitution was adopted on the very day the Assembly was first formed

48. Three friends argue about secularism. Anya: 'It means the state has no official religion and respects all faiths.' Bilal: 'It means the state promotes atheism.' Chetan: 'It means only the majority religion is allowed.' Who, if anyone, is correct?

- (A) Only Anya is correct
- (B) Only Bilal is correct
- (C) Only Chetan is correct
- (D) All three are correct in different ways

49. A reformer wants government decisions made faster and proposes letting the executive both pass laws and decide court cases. The chapter's reasoning would judge this proposal as:

- (A) Sound, because concentrating power always protects citizens better than dividing it
- (B) Neutral, because the judiciary's powers are unrelated to citizens' rights
- (C) Dangerous, because it collapses the separation of powers and lets one organ dominate, removing the checks that protect citizens
- (D) Required by the Constitution, which prefers all powers in the executive

50. Which statement correctly compares Fundamental Rights, Fundamental Duties and Directive Principles in one sentence?

- (A) All three can be enforced in court in exactly the same way
- (B) Rights are citizens' responsibilities, while Duties are claimed in court against the government
- (C) Directive Principles are court-enforceable, while Rights are merely goals for the government
- (D) Rights are court-enforceable protections for citizens; Duties are citizens' responsibilities; Directive Principles guide the government but are not court-enforceable

51. A historian says the Constitution being framed by a diverse Assembly over three years, drawing on the freedom struggle and India's heritage, best supports which single description?

- (A) A hurried text written by outsiders in a single day
- (B) A direct, word-for-word copy of one foreign country's constitution

- (C) An Indian-made document, deliberately framed by a broad assembly and rooted in the values India had fought for
- (D) A decree handed down by a hereditary monarch

52. A citizen says, 'If the Constitution can be amended, then there is no real difference between amending it and an ordinary person rewriting it on a whim.' The best correction is:

- (A) Amendments require a careful, rigorous process of debate in Parliament, so changing the Constitution is deliberate and bounded, unlike a casual personal rewrite
- (B) There is no difference; both are equally quick and informal
- (C) The Constitution actually cannot be amended at all, so the comparison fails
- (D) Only a single official may amend it, exactly as a person rewrites a note

53. Adding Fundamental Duties in 1976 and Panchayati Raj provisions in 1992 are best understood together as evidence that the Constitution:

- (A) Cannot respond to changing circumstances at all
- (B) Adapts to new needs over time through its careful amendment process
- (C) Was abolished and completely rewritten on each of those occasions
- (D) Was copied wholesale from another country in those years

54. A government office gives no faith any special advantage and follows no official religion of its own, while also choosing its town head by free election. Which Preamble value does the RELIGIOUS conduct illustrate, and which value is that conduct NOT?

- (A) It illustrates Socialist; it is NOT Secular
- (B) It illustrates Secular; it is NOT Socialist
- (C) It illustrates Republic; it is NOT Democratic
- (D) It illustrates Democratic; it is NOT Secular

55. Which single statement BEST sums up what the Constitution is for India, capturing all of its main roles?

- (A) A fixed foreign document that lists only punishments
- (B) The supreme, people-given, living rulebook that sets up the government, guarantees rights, lists duties and guides the nation's goals
- (C) A yearly budget showing how the government spends its money
- (D) A collection of folk songs with no legal force

56. A student claims, 'Because India borrowed the parliamentary system from Britain, India must also have Britain's hereditary monarch as head of state.' Identify the flaw.

- (A) India adapted the parliamentary system selectively but is a Republic with an elected head of state, so it did not take Britain's hereditary monarch
- (B) There is no flaw; borrowing the system means borrowing the monarch too
- (C) The flaw is that India borrowed the parliamentary system from the USA, not Britain
- (D) The flaw is that India has no head of state at all, monarch or otherwise

57. Which scenario best demonstrates the Constitution standing ABOVE even the most powerful office?

- (A) A Prime Minister changes the Constitution overnight without any debate
- (B) A Prime Minister declares the Constitution applies only to ordinary citizens
- (C) A Prime Minister's action is set aside because a court finds it conflicts with the Constitution
- (D) A Prime Minister suspends the Constitution every day except Republic Day

58. Four statements concern the Preamble's grouping of words. Exactly one is TRUE. Which?

- (A) All nine words are simply the names of India's neighbouring countries
- (B) Sovereign, Socialist, Secular, Democratic and Republic describe the STATE, while Justice, Liberty, Equality and Fraternity are GOALS for citizens
- (C) The nine words are the names of the three organs of government
- (D) Justice, Liberty, Equality and Fraternity describe the STATE, while the other five are the goals

59. Considering the chapter as a whole, which reasoning chain about why India needs a constitution is fully correct?

- (A) A constitution is needed so that no further laws ever have to be made, freeing the government from limits
- (B) Without agreed basic rules, government power and citizens' rights would be unclear and could be used unevenly; a constitution fixes these in advance, gives a stable framework, and binds even the powerful — so a constitution is needed
- (C) A constitution is needed only after a serious dispute has already damaged the nation, never before
- (D) A constitution is needed so the country becomes the largest in the world and removes the need for any government

60. A quiz pairs each Preamble word with the country whose constitution most directly inspired the related idea, then asks which pairing is the ODD ONE OUT — that is, the one whose stated source is WRONG.

- (A) Parliamentary system — inspired by Britain
- (B) Directive Principles of State Policy — inspired by Ireland
- (C) Fundamental Rights and judicial review — inspired by Ireland
- (D) Fundamental Rights and judicial review — inspired by the USA

Solutions — Social Science (Class 7), Chapter 10: The Constitution of India — An Introduction — Paper 5

Worked Solutions

1. (B) A constitution genuinely performs all four functions: it lays down how authority is gained and limited, guarantees rights citizens can defend, and declares the nation's long-term goals and values — so none of the four is misplaced. Treating aims as out of place is wrong because a constitution states values and goals as well as procedures. Saying the top officer should not be bound contradicts the core idea that the constitution stands above every individual, including the most powerful. Calling enforceable rights out of place confuses a constitution with an annual spending plan, which it is not.

2. (C) The imagined country fails precisely because one powerful person can change the rules at will — India avoids this by treating the Constitution as supreme over every individual and allowing change only through a rigorous parliamentary amendment process, never an overnight personal rewrite. A missing Preamble is not the issue; the imagined country still has the document's text. Fundamental Duties are citizens' responsibilities and are not the mechanism that restrains rulers from rewriting the law. A federal split divides power between centre and states but by itself would not stop one powerful figure from rewriting the whole document.

3. (D) Because the Constitution is the supreme law and even top officials pledge to uphold it, all three — judge, minister and citizen — are bound by it, so every answer is yes. Exempting officials contradicts the pledge that binds the most powerful. Exempting ordinary citizens is wrong because the Constitution applies to everyone, not just office-holders. Limiting it to Republic Day confuses the celebration of the day it came into force with a supposed limit on when it has authority.

4. (C) The drafting body (Constituent Assembly) first met in 1946 (R), British rule ended on 15 August 1947 (S), the text was adopted on 26 November 1949 (P), and it came into force on 26 January 1950 (Q) — giving R, S, P, Q. Putting S before R reverses 1947 and 1946. Swapping the last two (Q before P) wrongly places coming-into-force ahead of adoption, though a text must be accepted before it can operate. Beginning with P, Q places the 1949 and 1950 stages before the 1946 and 1947 events entirely.

5. (A) Beginning the drafting in 1946 did not make India a republic; that status arrived only when the Constitution came into force on 26 January 1950, which is why Republic Day marks 1950, not 1946. Pinning republic status to 15 August 1947 confuses becoming a republic with winning independence. Claiming no flaw, with the two dates identical, is simply false. Saying the only error is the year (1949 adoption) still misses that even adoption is not the same as coming into force, which is the event that actually made India a republic.

6. (A) The size (~299), the multi-year effort and the diversity together point to careful deliberation by a representative body, so the document mirrors many voices, not one group. A single author in a short time is contradicted by both the membership and the three-year span. One region alone is ruled out by the explicit diversity of communities and the inclusion of women. Foreign drafters are ruled out because the Assembly was an Indian body, not an external one.

7. (D) Dr. Rajendra Prasad presided over the whole Assembly while Dr. B. R. Ambedkar headed the Drafting Committee, so X then Y is Prasad then Ambedkar. Reversing them makes Ambedkar the Assembly's president and Prasad the drafter, which swaps their actual roles. Naming Nehru as the Assembly's presiding chair misattributes Prasad's role. Pairing Prasad with Patel as the drafter wrongly replaces Ambedkar, who headed the Drafting Committee.

8. (D) The strongest reply rebuts both halves: India selected and adapted features from several constitutions rather than copying one, and it fused them with its own struggle and heritage, making the document authentically Indian. Saying it copied Britain word for word concedes the false 'copy' charge. Claiming India borrowed nothing is also false, since it did learn selectively from others. Conceding that a foreign copy 'still counts as Indian' wrongly accepts the copy premise instead of refuting it.

9. (B) The parliamentary system draws mainly on Britain, Fundamental Rights with judicial review on the USA, and Directive Principles on Ireland — so the correct order is Britain, USA, Ireland. Leading with the USA for the parliamentary system swaps the first two sources. Pairing Fundamental Rights with Ireland and Directive Principles with the USA crosses those two wires. Beginning with Ireland for the parliamentary system mislabels all three by rotation.

10. (D) Sovereignty means India decides both its internal laws and its external affairs without outside control, so a single word answers both demands. Republic concerns having an elected (not hereditary) head of state and does not, by itself, bar foreign interference in lawmaking. Democratic concerns the people choosing rulers through elections, not freedom from foreign control. Secular concerns equal treatment of religions and is unrelated to either demand.

11. (A) Going to court to stop a violation exercises a court-enforceable Fundamental Right; planting trees out of responsibility to the nation is a Fundamental Duty; an unenforceable government policy goal is a Directive Principle — giving Right, Duty, Principle. The other orders all shuffle these three. The key tests: court-enforceability marks the Right, a citizen's responsibility marks the Duty, and a non-enforceable government goal marks the Directive Principle; mixing any two of these is the trap.

12. (D) Directive Principles guide government policy but are not enforceable in court, so they cannot be ranked above the enforceable Fundamental Rights, and the student's claim is wrong. Saying they are court-enforceable like Rights erases the very distinction the chapter draws. Calling them duties of citizens confuses Directive Principles (aimed at the government) with Fundamental Duties. Claiming they override Rights inverts the chapter, which presents Rights as the court-enforceable protections.

13. (B) Adding Fundamental Duties in 1976 and Panchayati Raj in 1992 are real amendments, so (i) and (ii) are true and (iii) — that it can never change — is false; the additions themselves prove the document is living. Calling all three true is self-contradictory, since real additions are changes. Treating only (iii) as true denies the documented 1976 and 1992 amendments. Denying the 1992 amendment contradicts the chapter's Panchayati Raj example.

14. (A) Amendment is a strength precisely because it keeps the document relevant while restricting change to a rigorous, debated process, which answers the 'whim' fear directly. Agreeing it is a weakness accepts the false premise that provisions vanish instantly. Crediting a single official with quick updates contradicts the requirement of careful parliamentary debate. Saying it has never been amended ignores the 1976 and 1992 examples.

15. (D) Equal treatment of all faiths with no state religion and freedom to worship is secularism, and the student's 'anti-religion' label is the classic misconception this corrects. Calling it socialism confuses an economic-fairness aim with religious equality. Saying the state promotes atheism wrongly endorses the anti-religion error. Claiming it imposes one official religion is the opposite of having no state religion.

16. (C) Forcing everyone into one official state religion directly contradicts secularism, which means no state religion and equal respect for all faiths. Letting all faiths worship freely upholds secularism rather than violating it. Allowing a person to change or leave a religion is exactly the freedom secularism protects. Treating all religions equally in government offices is secularism in action, not a breach of it.

17. (A) Choosing leaders through free and fair elections is the meaning of Democratic, so that is the right label, and Secular — which concerns equal treatment of religions, not elections — would be the wrong label for the election. Calling the election Secular swaps the two ideas. Labelling it Republic (elected head of state) and rejecting Sovereign misframes a local election about choosing leaders. Calling it Socialist mistakes an economic-fairness aim for a description of an election.

18. (B) Sovereign, Socialist, Secular, Democratic and Republic describe what kind of state India is, while Justice, Liberty, Equality and Fraternity are the goals for its citizens — that grouping is correct. Swapping the two lists wholesale reverses every word. Mixing Justice and Liberty into the 'state' group while leaving Socialist and Secular as 'goals' crosses several words. Putting Justice and Fraternity among 'state' words and Republic and Liberty among 'goals' likewise scrambles both groups.

19. (C) It is true that India copied no single country, and the reason — selective study and adaptation woven with India's own values — is exactly why that is so, making it both true and a correct explanation. Saying the reason fails to explain ignores that selective borrowing is precisely what prevents wholesale copying. Calling the reason false denies the documented method of the Assembly. Calling the assertion false contradicts the chapter's clear statement that India did not copy one country.

20. (B) Because the Constitution is supreme, a conflicting ordinary law can be struck down and enforcement must stop — the law yields to the Constitution. The Constitution does not auto-amend itself to fit a new law; rather, the law must conform to it. 'Newer law wins' ignores that no ordinary law outranks the Constitution regardless of date. Cancelling both together misunderstands supremacy, under which the Constitution survives and the conflicting law falls.

21. (D) Merging the three organs destroys the checks and balances that stop power concentrating, which is exactly the danger the Constitution guards against to protect citizens. Claiming it would slow government further mistakes the mechanism; the danger is concentrated power, not speed. Secularism concerns religion, not the separation of organs, so it is the wrong objection. The federal split is about centre-versus-states, a different axis from the legislature-executive-judiciary separation at issue here.

22. (B) Freedom of speech is a court-enforceable Fundamental Right, safeguarding public property is a citizen's Fundamental Duty, and an inequality-reducing government scheme reflects a Directive Principle — giving Right, Duty, Principle. The first wrong order calls speech a Principle and property-care a Right, swapping their categories. The second wrong order mislabels all three. Calling all three the same court-enforceable Right erases the distinctions among Rights, Duties and Principles.

23. (A) Fairer access for a disadvantaged group is social and economic Justice, and because no court can compel its completion it rests on a Directive Principle that guides but does not bind the courts. Calling it Liberty (freedom of thought and worship) and a court-enforceable Right misreads both the goal and the non-enforceability. Calling it Fraternity grounded in a Duty mistakes a brotherhood ideal for fair access and misplaces the provision. Calling it Equality enforced by courts treats a Preamble word as itself a court-enforceable rule, which it is not.

24. (D) Independence was 1947 and adoption was 1949, a gap of about two years, the longest of the consecutive intervals. Adoption (1949) to coming-into-force (1950) is only about two months, not two years. The Assembly meeting (1946) to Independence (1947) is about one year, not three. Coming-into-force (1950) back to the 1946 meeting is four years and is not a consecutive forward interval at all.

25. (C) Adoption (26 November 1949) was the Assembly accepting the final text, while coming into force (26 January 1950) was that text becoming operative law — two distinct stages on two different dates. Treating them as the same event on one day ignores the deliberate gap. Saying adoption meant rejection misreads 'adopt' as 'reject'. Reversing the years places adoption in 1950 and force in 1949, the opposite of the facts.

26. (A) Independence from Britain was 15 August 1947, whereas 26 January 1950 marks the Constitution coming into force and India becoming a republic, so the two are different events. Treating both dates as the same celebration ignores that distinction. Swapping the meanings of the two dates is simply incorrect. Saying India became free in 1950 misdates independence, which was 1947.

27. (A) Deciding defence policy free of outside control is sovereignty, while refusing to adopt any official state religion is secularism — so the order is Sovereign then Secular. Reversing them applies secularism to a defence demand and sovereignty to a religion demand, mismatching both. Republic (elected head of state) and Democratic (people choose rulers) address neither foreign control of defence nor a state religion. Socialist (economic fairness) and Republic likewise fit neither demand.

28. (B) Both criticising policy and choosing one's faith are freedoms of thought, speech, belief and worship, which is exactly what Liberty covers. Equality concerns equal status and treatment, not freedom of expression or worship. Fraternity is about brotherhood and unity, not individual freedoms. Justice is about fair social, economic and political treatment, which does not specifically protect speaking and worshipping freely.

29. (D) Treating rich and poor alike with no favour is Equality — equal status and treatment without discrimination — so that is the right label, while Liberty (freedom of thought and worship) would be the wrong label. Calling it Liberty and rejecting Equality reverses the correct fit. Fraternity is about brotherhood, not equal legal treatment, so it is wrong here. Sovereignty concerns freedom from outside control, unrelated to equal treatment under the law.

30. (B) Mutual respect and shared belonging among diverse citizens is Fraternity, while Sovereignty — freedom of the nation from outside control — is the least related to that feeling. Calling it Sovereignty and dismissing Fraternity inverts the correct answer. Equality (equal status) is closer to the scene than the option admits, and naming Liberty as least related misjudges the fit. Justice is about fair treatment, not the spirit of unity, and Fraternity is in fact the most related, not the least.

31. (D) Together the nine words describe a self-governing nation of free, equal citizens living in unity, fairness and freedom. A hereditary kingdom contradicts both Democratic and Republic. A single official religion contradicts Secular. Control from abroad contradicts Sovereign. Only the first option fits all nine words at once.

32. (D) 'We, the People' declares that the Constitution's authority flows from the people themselves, who gave it to themselves — the opposite of a monarch granting it. Saying a foreign ruler wrote and handed it over contradicts that self-given authority. Claiming only the government holds power denies that the people are the source. Calling the phrase decorative ignores its central meaning about the origin of authority.

33. (C) The correct repair denies both errors: the Constitution is living and amendable through a careful process, and it was given by the people of India to themselves, not by a foreign power. Conceding it 'cannot be changed' leaves the first error standing. Granting that a foreign power handed it over leaves the second error standing and adds the false 'anyone, anytime' claim. Saying it changes daily and a king wrote it replaces the original errors with new ones.

34. (A) Supremacy means all other laws must agree with the Constitution and even officials are bound by it — that is what makes it the highest law. Its length, however great, is not what gives it supremacy. Being read at ceremonies is symbolic and does not establish legal supremacy. Allowing the powerful to set it aside would be the very opposite of supremacy.

35. (C) Federalism shares powers between centre and states under the Constitution, which is a division of authority rather than freedom for states to ignore the centre. Saying states hold every power and the centre none misdescribes federalism as state supremacy. A single all-powerful government with no states is the opposite of a federal split. One authority holding everything denies the existence of the centre-state division entirely.

36. (A) The limit appears with a Directive Principle: an unmet poverty-reduction goal cannot be enforced in court, unlike a Fundamental Right. Protecting freedom of speech is a Right and IS court-enforceable, so it does not show the limit. Respecting the National Flag is a Duty, not a court-claimable Right. A neighbour's demand to change a law is barred by sovereignty and is not a matter of court-enforceable rights at all.

37. (A) It is true that the Constitution can change, and the reason — that it is a living document amended through careful process, with the 1976 and 1992 examples — is precisely why, so both are true and the reason explains the assertion. Saying the reason does not explain ignores that the examples directly demonstrate the change. Calling the reason false denies the documented amendments. Calling the assertion false contradicts the living-document idea.

38. (C) The false claim is that the Assembly was formed in 1950; it was actually formed in 1946, while 1950 is when the Constitution came into force. It is true the Assembly was formed in 1946, before the 1947 independence. It is true the post-Partition membership was about 299. It is true the Assembly included several women members. Only the 1950 formation date is incorrect.

39. (C) Democratic correctly means the people govern themselves and choose rulers through free and fair elections. Sovereign means freedom FROM outside control, not obedience to a foreign power, so that pairing is wrong. Republic means an elected head of state, the opposite of a hereditary monarch. Secular means equal respect for all faiths, not opposition to religion.

40. (A) In order, the freedom struggle gave the goals of liberty and equality, India's heritage supplied long-standing values, and learnings from other countries supplied features like the British parliamentary system. The first wrong option starts with the foreign-country influence instead of the freedom struggle. The second begins with heritage instead of the freedom struggle. The last lists items that are not the three influences at all.

41. (D) Republic means an elected head of state, which is the opposite of hereditary monarchy, so the claim is exactly backwards. Rule by religious leaders is unrelated to what 'republic' means. A republic does have a head of state — an elected one — so saying it has none is false. Agreeing it means a royal family endorses the very error being corrected.

42. (C) Socialist expresses the aim of reducing inequality so wealth and opportunity are shared more fairly, and concentrating wealth in one family contradicts that aim. Banning all trade is not the meaning of socialist here, and treating it as the fit while calling fairness a contradiction inverts the idea. Making one family richest is itself the contradiction, not the fit. Removing government from the economy is not what the word expresses in this chapter.

43. (C) A fair-wages goal the court cannot compel is a Directive Principle, while a court order stopping unlawful detention enforces a Fundamental Right — so the order is Principle then Right. Reversing them mislabels the unenforceable policy as a Right and the court remedy as a Principle. Calling the first a Duty confuses a government goal with a citizen's responsibility. Calling a Directive Principle court-enforceable contradicts its defining feature.

44. (B) A constitution does not choose each citizen's personal career or daily job, so that is the odd one out. Setting up the three organs with checks among them is a core function. Guaranteeing court-enforceable rights is a core function. Stating long-term goals and values is a core function. Only the personal-career item falls outside what a constitution does.

45. (D) India became a republic when the Constitution came into force on 26 January 1950, which is exactly what Republic Day marks. Adoption on 26 November 1949 was acceptance of the text, not yet the operative law that made India a republic. Independence in 1947 ended British rule but did not by itself make India a republic. The 1946 Assembly meeting only began the drafting and did not confer republic status.

46. (D) Going to court to protect a violated right is the exercise of a Fundamental Right, not a Fundamental Duty, so it is the misplaced item. Respecting the National Flag and Anthem is a Fundamental Duty. Protecting the environment is a Fundamental Duty. Safeguarding public property is a Fundamental Duty. Only the court remedy belongs to the Rights category.

47. (B) Republic status arrived when the Constitution came into force on 26 January 1950, while the 1946 Assembly meeting merely started the drafting, so the 1950 date is the right one to celebrate. Saying the Assembly met on 26 January conflates two unrelated dates. Tying it to independence misdefines 'republic', which is about an elected head of state, not the end of foreign rule. Claiming adoption coincided with the Assembly's formation muddles 1946, 1949 and 1950.

48. (A) Anya is right: secularism means no official state religion and equal respect for all faiths. Bilal is wrong because secularism is not the promotion of atheism. Chetan is wrong because secularism does not restrict citizens to the majority religion. Since two of the three are mistaken, 'all three correct' cannot hold.

49. (C) Letting the executive make laws and decide cases destroys the separation of powers and the checks that guard citizens, so the chapter would judge it dangerous.

Concentrating power does not protect citizens better; the chapter warns it endangers them. The judiciary's independence is directly tied to protecting rights, so the proposal is not neutral. The Constitution prefers separated organs that check one another, not all power in the executive.

50. (D) The accurate comparison is that Rights are court-enforceable, Duties are citizens' responsibilities, and Directive Principles guide the government without being enforceable in court. Saying all three are equally enforceable erases the key distinction. Swapping Rights and Duties misassigns court-enforceability. Calling Directive Principles enforceable and Rights mere goals reverses the actual roles.

51. (C) A diverse Assembly working over three years on values from the freedom struggle and heritage best supports an Indian-made, deliberately framed, value-rooted document. A hurried one-day text by outsiders contradicts the three-year, Indian-led process. A word-for-word foreign copy contradicts selective adaptation rooted in Indian values. A monarch's decree contradicts the people-given, assembly-framed nature of the document.

52. (A) Amendment differs from a whimsical rewrite because it demands rigorous parliamentary debate, making change deliberate and bounded. Saying there is no difference ignores that process. Claiming it cannot be amended contradicts the living-document idea and the 1976 and 1992 examples. Saying a single official may amend it denies the requirement of careful debate.

53. (B) Two real additions years apart show the Constitution adapting through amendment, which is the living-document idea. Saying it cannot respond to change is contradicted by the very additions. Claiming it was abolished and rewritten each time misreads amendment as replacement. Saying it was copied from abroad in those years has no basis in the chapter.

54. (B) Treating all faiths alike with no state religion is Secular, and it is not Socialist, which concerns economic fairness. Calling the religious conduct Socialist while denying Secular reverses the right answer. Republic and Democratic relate to the election, not to the equal treatment of religions. Calling it Democratic and not Secular again misassigns the religious conduct to the election idea.

55. (B) The best summary captures supremacy, people-given origin, living/amendable nature, setting up government, guaranteeing rights, listing duties and guiding goals. A fixed foreign punishment-list contradicts the living, people-given, multi-role nature. A yearly budget mistakes the supreme law for a spending plan. A folk-song collection denies its legal force entirely.

56. (A) India borrowed and adapted the parliamentary system but, as a Republic, has an elected head of state rather than Britain's hereditary monarch — selective borrowing does not import the monarchy. Saying borrowing the system means borrowing the monarch ignores that adaptation. Claiming the system came from the USA misattributes the source, which is Britain. Saying India has no head of state is false; it has an elected one.

57. (C) When a court can set aside even a Prime Minister's action for conflicting with the Constitution, the document clearly stands above the most powerful office. An overnight rewrite without debate would defy the supremacy and careful-amendment idea, not demonstrate it. Declaring it applies only to ordinary citizens contradicts the pledge binding officials. Suspending it except on Republic Day misrepresents when the Constitution has force.

58. (B) The true statement groups Sovereign, Socialist, Secular, Democratic and Republic as descriptions of the state and Justice, Liberty, Equality and Fraternity as goals for citizens. Calling the nine words neighbouring countries is plainly false. Calling them the three organs' names is false, since there are nine words and three organs. Swapping the two groups reverses the correct grouping.

59. (B) The correct chain explains that a constitution fixes powers, rights and limits in advance, gives a stable framework and binds even the powerful, which is exactly why it is needed. Saying it ends the need for further laws and frees the government from limits is the opposite of providing limits. Saying it is needed only after damage misses that it is meant to prevent disputes by setting rules beforehand. Tying it to country size or removing government has nothing to do with why a constitution exists.

60. (C) Fundamental Rights with judicial review were inspired by the USA, not Ireland, so pairing them with Ireland is the wrong (odd-one-out) pairing. The parliamentary system inspired by Britain is a correct pairing. Directive Principles inspired by Ireland is a correct pairing. Fundamental Rights and judicial review inspired by the USA is the correct source, confirming the Ireland version is the mistaken one.
