Chapter 10: The Constitution of India

Paper 3 — (progressively harder)

Subject	Social Science (NCERT Class 7)
Chapter	10 — The Constitution of India
Total Questions	60 (Multiple Choice, single correct)
Maximum Marks	240
Suggested Time	90 minutes

Marking scheme: +4 for each correct answer · -1 for each wrong answer · 0 if unattempted.

Instructions: Each question has four options (A), (B), (C), (D); exactly one is correct. Secular means equal respect for all faiths and freedom of religion (not anti-religion), the Constitution is a living document that can be amended (not fixed forever), and Republic Day (26 Jan 1950) marks when it came into force, not Independence. Do not write on this paper — mark answers on your answer sheet.

1. A new club is formed by ten friends. Before deciding anything, they agree to write down the basic rules: who can be president, how decisions are voted on, and what every member's rights and duties are. Which idea about a constitution does this best illustrate?
 - (A) A constitution is needed only after a serious quarrel has already broken out
 - (B) A constitution provides agreed basic rules so that powers, rights and limits are clear before disputes arise
 - (C) A constitution mainly records the names of the wealthiest members
 - (D) A constitution removes the need for anyone to ever make further decisions
 2. Suppose India had no constitution at all. Which consequence follows most directly?
 - (A) Elections would automatically become free and fair without any rules
 - (B) Every citizen would instantly receive an equal share of the nation's wealth
 - (C) There would be no agreed limits on government power or guaranteed rights for citizens, so authority could be used unevenly and unpredictably
 - (D) The country would no longer need any government of any kind
 3. A Prime Minister wishes to act in a way the courts have ruled unconstitutional, saying 'I am the most powerful person in the country.' Why does the Constitution not allow this?

- (A) The Constitution applies only to ordinary citizens and not to ministers
- (B) The Constitution can be overruled by whoever currently holds the most power
- (C) The Constitution only takes effect on Republic Day each year
- (D) The Constitution stands above every individual, so even the most powerful official is bound by it

4. The legislature passes a law, the executive carries it out, and the judiciary can strike it down if it breaks the Constitution. This arrangement is best described as:

- (A) A merger of all three organs into one decision-making body
- (B) Three organs that never influence or limit one another in any way
- (C) Separation of powers with checks and balances, so no single organ becomes too powerful
- (D) A system in which the judiciary alone makes and enforces all laws

5. Why does the Constitution deliberately keep the three organs of government separate yet able to check one another?

- (A) To stop any one organ from misusing power and thereby protect citizens
- (B) To make government slow purely for the sake of slowness
- (C) To let the executive choose every judge personally
- (D) To give one organ complete control over the other two

6. A constitution sets out a country's long-term goals and values as well as its rules. Which of the following is an example of such a goal rather than a mere rule of procedure?

- (A) Building a society of equal status and opportunity for all citizens
- (B) The exact number of seats in the lower house of Parliament
- (C) The order in which bills are read out in the legislature
- (D) The official forms used to register a complaint in court

7. A citizen argues, 'A constitution is just a yearly budget showing how money is spent.' What is the best correction?

- (A) A constitution is correctly described as a yearly account of spending
- (B) A constitution is only a collection of the country's folk songs
- (C) A constitution is a treaty a nation signs with a foreign power
- (D) A constitution is the supreme document setting out a nation's basic principles, government and citizens' rights and duties, not an annual spending plan

8. Judges, ministers and other officials take a pledge to uphold the Constitution. What does the existence of this pledge most strongly imply about the Constitution's place?

- (A) It is a ceremonial text with no real authority over officials
- (B) It binds only the officials who happen to remember their pledge
- (C) It is one option among many that officials may follow if they wish
- (D) It is the highest authority in the land, to which even powerful officials answer

9. The Constituent Assembly that wrote India's Constitution was formed in 1946 and finished its work over about three years. Which conclusion does this timeline best support?

- (A) The Constitution was written in a single day by one person
- (B) Drafting the Constitution was a careful, deliberate process rather than a hurried one
- (C) The Constitution was simply copied unchanged from another country
- (D) The Constitution was drawn up by the British Parliament before 1946

10. Dr. Rajendra Prasad and Dr. B. R. Ambedkar both held leading roles in framing the Constitution. How did their roles differ?

- (A) Ambedkar chaired the Assembly while Prasad drafted the text
- (B) Both jointly headed the Drafting Committee with no other role
- (C) Neither held any official role in making the Constitution
- (D) Prasad chaired the whole Constituent Assembly, while Ambedkar headed the Drafting Committee that prepared the text

11. On 26 November 1949 the Constitution was adopted, but it came into force only on 26 January 1950. What does this gap between the two dates show?

- (A) Adoption (accepting the final text) and coming into force (when it became operative law) were two separate stages
- (B) The Constitution was rejected in 1949 and rewritten in 1950
- (C) Both dates mark the day India became independent from Britain
- (D) The Constitution was adopted and enforced on exactly the same day

12. A student writes that 'Republic Day celebrates India winning freedom from British rule.' Why is this incorrect?

- (A) Republic Day and Independence Day fall on the very same date
- (B) India only became free in 1950, so Republic Day is freedom day
- (C) Republic Day marks the day the Constituent Assembly was first formed
- (D) Independence came on 15 August 1947, while 26 January marks the Constitution coming into force and India becoming a republic

13. Which sequence of events is in correct chronological order, earliest first?

- (A) Independence (1947), Assembly formed (1946), comes into force (1950), adopted (1949)
- (B) Constituent Assembly formed (1946), Independence (1947), Constitution adopted (1949), Constitution comes into force (1950)
- (C) Constitution adopted (1949), Independence (1947), Assembly formed (1946), comes into force (1950)
- (D) Comes into force (1950), adopted (1949), Independence (1947), Assembly formed (1946)

14. The Constituent Assembly studied the constitutions of several countries before writing India's. Which statement best captures how it used them?

- (A) It examined many sources and chose what suited India, weaving them together with India's own values
- (B) It copied one foreign country's constitution word for word
- (C) It refused to look at any other country's experience at all
- (D) It invented every single idea from scratch with no study of others

15. India's parliamentary system is largely modelled on Britain's, its Fundamental Rights idea draws on the USA, and Directive Principles draw on Ireland. This pattern best shows that India:

- (A) Copied the entire constitution of Britain alone
- (B) Took everything from the United States
- (C) Borrowed nothing from any other country
- (D) Drew selectively from different countries for different features rather than copying any one whole

16. The freedom movement deeply influenced the Constitution. Which feature most directly reflects that influence?

- (A) Keeping a hereditary monarch as India's head of state
- (B) Banning elections so that rulers need not be chosen
- (C) Building into the Constitution the values of liberty and equality that India had fought for
- (D) Rejecting every Indian tradition and value

17. India is described in the Preamble as 'Sovereign'. A neighbouring country demands that India change one of its laws to suit them. What does sovereignty mean for India's response?

- (A) India has the supreme right to decide its own internal and external matters, free from outside control
- (B) India must obey the demand because a neighbour has asked
- (C) India has no government able to make its own laws
- (D) India is governed by an international body that decides such matters

18. Assertion: India is a 'Republic'. Reason: India's head of state is an elected person rather than a hereditary king or queen. Which is correct?

- (A) The assertion is true but the reason is false
- (B) Both the assertion and the reason are true, and the reason correctly explains the assertion
- (C) The assertion is false but the reason is true
- (D) Both the assertion and the reason are false

19. The Preamble calls India 'Democratic'. In a town, the head official is chosen by the people in a free and fair election. Which Preamble word does this best reflect?

- (A) Socialist - because wealth is being shared equally
- (B) Sovereign - because India is free from outside control
- (C) Democratic - the people choose their rulers through free and fair elections
- (D) Secular - because all religions are treated equally

20. 'Socialist' in the Preamble expresses an aim about the economy. Which government action fits this word best?

- (A) Making sure one family becomes the richest in the country
- (B) Working to reduce inequality so that wealth and opportunity are shared more fairly
- (C) Banning all buying and selling of goods
- (D) Removing the government entirely

21. Which set of Preamble words describes the kind of STATE India is, as opposed to the goals it sets for its citizens?

- (A) Justice, Liberty, Equality, Fraternity
- (B) Sovereign, Justice, Republic, Liberty
- (C) Secular, Equality, Democratic, Fraternity
- (D) Sovereign, Socialist, Secular, Democratic, Republic

22. A foreign company claims it can decide India's defence policy. A citizen replies that this is impossible under the Preamble. Which word best supports the citizen's reply?

- (A) Secular
- (B) Sovereign
- (C) Socialist
- (D) Republic

23. A person says, 'Because India is a Republic, it must be ruled by a hereditary royal family.' What is wrong with this statement?

- (A) A republic means the head of state is elected, which is the opposite of hereditary rule
- (B) Nothing is wrong; a republic does mean rule by a royal family
- (C) A republic means rule by religious leaders, not a royal family
- (D) A republic means India has no head of state at all

24. Which pairing of a Preamble word with its meaning is correct?

- (A) Sovereign - India must follow the orders of a foreign power
- (B) Republic - India is ruled by a hereditary monarch
- (C) Secular - India is opposed to all religions
- (D) Democratic - the people govern themselves and choose rulers through elections

25. A court rules that a poor person and a wealthy person must be treated exactly alike under the law. Which Preamble goal does this most directly uphold?

- (A) Fraternity - a feeling of brotherhood among citizens
- (B) Liberty - freedom of thought and worship

- (C) Equality - equal status and equal treatment for all, without discrimination
- (D) Sovereignty - freedom of the nation from outside control

26. A writer freely criticises a government policy and chooses her own religion to follow. Which Preamble goal protects these choices?

- (A) Liberty - the freedom to think, speak, believe and worship
- (B) Justice - fair social, economic and political treatment
- (C) Equality - equal status and opportunity for all
- (D) Fraternity - brotherhood and unity among citizens

27. 'Fraternity' in the Preamble is best shown by which action?

- (A) Citizens of different backgrounds living together with mutual respect and a sense of unity
- (B) Regions competing fiercely against one another for advantage
- (C) A citizen showing loyalty only to their own family
- (D) People obeying the orders of a foreign ruler

28. 'Justice' in the Preamble is described as social, economic and political. A scheme that helps a disadvantaged group get fair access to opportunities mainly advances which kind?

- (A) Punishment for everyone regardless of fault
- (B) Social and economic justice - fairer treatment and opportunity for those who were disadvantaged
- (C) Freedom only for those who are already wealthy
- (D) The rule of whoever is physically strongest

29. Taken as a whole, the Preamble's nine key words point toward what kind of nation?

- (A) A kingdom ruled by one hereditary family
- (B) A state with a single official religion that others must follow
- (C) A country whose major decisions are controlled from abroad
- (D) A self-governing nation of free and equal citizens living in unity and fairness

30. Which of these is an example of a Fundamental Right being put into action?

- (A) A citizen voluntarily plants trees to protect the environment
- (B) A citizen approaches a court to protect a right the government has violated
- (C) Parliament debates the wording of a new tax
- (D) The government decides to build a new highway

31. A citizen plants trees and protects public property out of a sense of responsibility to the nation. This is best classified as exercising a:

- (A) Fundamental Right enforceable in court
- (B) Directive Principle binding on the courts
- (C) Power reserved for ministers
- (D) Fundamental Duty

32. The clearest difference between a Fundamental Right and a Directive Principle of State Policy is that:

- (A) A Directive Principle can be enforced in court, while a Right cannot
- (B) Both are equally enforceable in court
- (C) Both are merely optional suggestions with no role at all
- (D) A Fundamental Right can be enforced in court, while a Directive Principle is a guiding goal that cannot be enforced there

33. A Directive Principle aims at a goal but cannot be enforced in court. What useful role does it still play?

- (A) It can be claimed directly in court like a Fundamental Right
- (B) It overrides Fundamental Rights whenever the two clash
- (C) It guides the government when framing its policies and laws
- (D) It has no effect on government decisions at all

34. Match correctly: which is a Fundamental Duty, NOT a Fundamental Right?

- (A) Showing respect for the National Flag and the National Anthem
- (B) Going to court when one's freedom is unlawfully taken away
- (C) Claiming equal protection of the law before a judge
- (D) Seeking a court remedy for a violated right

35. Fundamental Duties were added to the Constitution by an amendment in 1976. What does the fact that they were ADDED later tell us?

- (A) The Constitution can never be changed once it is written
- (B) The Duties were copied directly from a foreign king's decree
- (C) The Constitution is a living document that can be amended to include new provisions over time
- (D) The Constitution is rewritten completely every single year

36. A student claims, 'Directive Principles are pointless because they cannot be enforced in court.' What is the best reply?

- (A) They are not pointless; they guide the government in shaping its laws and policies even though courts do not enforce them
- (B) The student is right; principles that cannot be enforced have no use
- (C) They are actually enforceable in court just like Fundamental Rights
- (D) They are binding only on individual citizens, not on the government

37. Which statement correctly compares Fundamental Rights, Fundamental Duties and Directive Principles?

- (A) Rights protect citizens and can be enforced in court; Duties are citizens' responsibilities; Directive Principles guide the government but are not court-enforceable
- (B) All three can be enforced in court in exactly the same way

- (C) Rights are responsibilities of citizens, while Duties are claimed in court
- (D) Directive Principles are court-enforceable, while Rights are only goals

38. If a government policy aimed at reducing poverty cannot be challenged in court for not being achieved, this policy is most likely based on a:

- (A) Fundamental Right, which can always be enforced in court
- (B) Fundamental Duty, which is a responsibility of citizens
- (C) Directive Principle of State Policy, which guides government but is not enforceable in court
- (D) Preamble keyword, which has no connection to government policy

39. The phrase 'We, the People of India' at the start of the Preamble matters most because it declares that:

- (A) A foreign ruler wrote the Constitution and handed it to India
- (B) A king graciously granted the Constitution to his subjects
- (C) The Constitution's authority comes from the people of India, who gave it to themselves
- (D) Only the government, not the people, holds power in India

40. Because the Constitution opens with 'We, the People of India', it is best understood as:

- (A) A document the people of India gave to themselves
- (B) A gift handed down by the British monarch
- (C) An order issued by the United Nations
- (D) A decree announced by the Supreme Court

41. In a secular country like India, a citizen wishes to follow a religion that very few others practise. What does secularism guarantee here?

- (A) The citizen must switch to the most common religion instead
- (B) The citizen must give up religion because the state opposes all faiths
- (C) The citizen may follow it only if the government approves each year
- (D) The citizen is free to follow that faith, since the state respects all religions equally and has none of its own

42. A person argues, 'Secular means India is against religion.' Why is this a misconception?

- (A) Secular means the state actively promotes atheism
- (B) Secular means only one chosen religion is permitted
- (C) Secular actually means equal respect for all faiths and the freedom to follow any religion, not opposition to religion
- (D) Secular means practising any religion is against the law

43. Two festivals of different religions are celebrated freely in the same town, and the government favours neither faith. This situation best illustrates:

- (A) Sovereignty - the nation is free from outside control
- (B) A state religion to which all citizens must belong
- (C) Secularism - the state respects all religions equally and has no official religion
- (D) Opposition to religion by the government

44. Which statement about secularism in the Indian Constitution is accurate?

- (A) The state declares one religion as the official faith for all
- (B) The state has no official religion and treats all faiths with equal respect, leaving citizens free to choose
- (C) The state forbids citizens from practising any religion
- (D) The state forces every citizen to follow the majority religion

45. A government office treats requests from people of every religion in exactly the same way, giving no faith special advantage. This conduct upholds which constitutional value?

- (A) Federalism - the sharing of power between centre and states
- (B) Republicanism - having an elected head of state
- (C) Socialism - reducing economic inequality
- (D) Secularism - equal treatment of all religions by the state

46. Secularism protects a person's freedom of religion. Which of the following would VIOLATE this principle?

- (A) Allowing people of all faiths to worship freely
- (B) Treating every religion with equal respect under the law
- (C) Letting a person change or leave their religion if they choose
- (D) A rule forcing everyone in the country to follow one single official religion

47. A citizen of one faith and a citizen of another both expect the government to protect their right to worship. Under a secular constitution, the government should:

- (A) Protect only the citizen belonging to the larger religion
- (B) Protect both equally, since it respects all faiths and favours none
- (C) Protect neither, because the state opposes all religion
- (D) Protect whichever citizen pays the government more

48. The Constitution is called a 'living document'. Which feature most directly makes it so?

- (A) It can be amended so it adapts as the country's needs change over time
- (B) It is read aloud in public every single day
- (C) It was written by people who were alive at the time
- (D) It can never be altered once it has been written

49. Amendments to the Constitution are rigorously debated in Parliament before being accepted. What does this rigour show about constitutional change?

- (A) Change is completely forbidden under any circumstances
- (B) Change happens automatically every year without debate
- (C) Change is possible but deliberately not easy or careless
- (D) Change can be made secretly by a single person

50. Adding Panchayati Raj provisions through a 1992 amendment is best understood as an example of the Constitution:

- (A) Being unable to respond to changing circumstances
- (B) Being abolished and completely rewritten that year
- (C) Being copied wholesale from another country in 1992
- (D) Adapting to new needs through the amendment process

51. A student says, 'Since the Constitution can be amended, it can be changed easily by anyone at any time.' What is the best correction?

- (A) The student is right; anyone can change it whenever they like
- (B) The Constitution actually cannot be amended at all
- (C) Amendments are possible only through a careful process of debate in Parliament, so change is deliberate, not casual
- (D) Only a foreign ruler is allowed to amend the Constitution

52. Why is the ability to amend the Constitution considered a strength rather than a weakness?

- (A) It lets the Constitution stay relevant by adapting to changing needs while still being changed only through a careful process
- (B) It allows the Constitution to be discarded whenever it is inconvenient
- (C) It means the Constitution changes randomly with no debate
- (D) It lets a single official rewrite it whenever they wish

53. A citizen argues, 'Our Constitution is fixed forever and was handed to us by a foreign power.' Which correction is fully accurate?

- (A) It truly cannot be changed and did come from abroad
- (B) It is a living document that can be amended, and it was given by the people of India to themselves
- (C) It changes every day and was written by a king
- (D) It has no values or long-term goals of any kind

54. India's Constitution divides powers between a central government and state governments. This basic arrangement is described as a:

- (A) Single government with no states beneath it
- (B) Federal structure, sharing powers between the centre and the states
- (C) System where states alone hold all power and the centre none
- (D) System where one religious leader holds all authority

55. Which best explains why the Constitution is regarded as the SUPREME law of the land?

- (A) It is the longest book ever written in India
- (B) All other laws must agree with it, and even the government and its officials are bound by it
- (C) It is read out at every official function
- (D) It can be set aside by whoever holds the most power

56. A law passed by the legislature is found to conflict with the Constitution. What follows from the Constitution being the supreme law?

- (A) The conflicting law can be struck down, because no law may override the Constitution
- (B) The Constitution must be changed to match the new law automatically
- (C) Both the law and the Constitution are cancelled together
- (D) The newer law always wins because it was passed more recently

57. Considering everything in the chapter, which single statement best sums up what the Constitution is for India?

- (A) It is a fixed foreign document that lists only punishments
- (B) It is a yearly budget showing how the government spends money
- (C) It is the supreme, people-given, living rulebook that sets up the government, guarantees rights, lists duties and guides the nation's goals
- (D) It is a collection of folk songs with no legal force

58. Assertion: The Constitution can be changed over time. Reason: It is a living document amended through a careful parliamentary process, as seen with Fundamental Duties (1976) and Panchayati Raj (1992). Which is correct?

- (A) The assertion is true but the reason is false
- (B) Both the assertion and the reason are true, and the reason correctly explains the assertion
- (C) The assertion is false but the reason is true
- (D) Both the assertion and the reason are false

59. A teacher asks why a single all-powerful office is dangerous and how the Constitution guards against it. Which answer fits the chapter best?

- (A) By merging all powers into one office for faster decisions
- (B) By separating the legislature, executive and judiciary and letting them check one another, so power is not concentrated in one place
- (C) By letting the executive control the courts and the legislature
- (D) By removing all rules so no office has any limits

60. The Constituent Assembly that framed the Constitution included members from many regions, communities and backgrounds, as well as women members. What does this diversity best suggest about the Constitution that resulted?

- (A) It was written to favour only the wealthiest members of the Assembly
- (B) It represented the views of a single region of India alone
- (C) It was shaped by a wide range of voices, helping it reflect the interests of a diverse nation rather than one group
- (D) It was drafted entirely by people from outside India

Worked Solutions

1. (B) Writing down basic rules in advance shows that a constitution sets out agreed powers, rights and limits before disagreements happen, so everyone knows where they stand. It is not created only after a quarrel; agreeing rules beforehand is precisely how disputes are prevented. It is not a list of the richest members, and it does not end all further decision-making - day-to-day choices still get made within the agreed framework.

2. (C) A constitution lays down limits on power and guarantees rights; without one there is nothing agreed to restrain authority or protect citizens, so power could be used unevenly. Free and fair elections do not arise on their own - they need rules a constitution provides. No constitution does not redistribute wealth equally, and the absence of a constitution would create more need for arbitrary rule, not abolish government.

3. (D) Because top officials pledge to uphold the Constitution, it ranks above every individual, so even a Prime Minister must obey it. It does not apply only to ordinary citizens - the pledge taken by judges and ministers shows it binds them especially. Power does not let anyone override it, and it is in force every day, not only on Republic Day.

4. (C) Each organ has its own role yet can limit the others - the judiciary can strike down an unconstitutional law - which is exactly checks and balances guarding against concentrated power. The organs are kept separate, not merged. They do influence one another, so 'never limit one another' is wrong. And the judiciary does not make or enforce laws; the legislature makes and the executive enforces them.

5. (A) The point of separation plus checks is to prevent any single organ from abusing its power, which protects citizens' rights. Slowing government for its own sake is not the aim; deliberation and restraint serve protection, not delay. Letting the executive pick every judge would defeat the check the judiciary provides, and giving one organ total control would destroy the balance the design exists to create.

6. (A) Aiming at equal status and opportunity is a long-term value the Constitution sets, the kind of goal that shapes the nation's direction. The number of seats, the order of readings, and official complaint forms are procedural rules - they tell you how things are done but are not the broad values the Constitution holds up as its aims.

7. (D) A constitution is the supreme rulebook covering principles, the structure of government and citizens' rights and duties - far broader than money matters. A budget is a yearly spending plan made under the constitution, not the constitution itself. It is neither a songbook nor a foreign treaty; those describe entirely different documents.

8. (D) Officials swearing to uphold it shows the Constitution is the supreme authority everyone, however powerful, must answer to. It is not merely ceremonial - the pledge has binding force. It does not depend on memory or willingness; the obligation is fixed, and the Constitution is not one optional choice among many but the binding framework above all.

9. (B) Taking roughly three years shows the writing was painstaking and deliberate, not rushed. A multi-year body of many members is the opposite of one person writing it in a day. The long debate also shows it was not a straight copy of any single country, and it was the Indian Constituent Assembly, not the British Parliament, that did this work.

10. (D) Prasad presided over the entire Assembly, whereas Ambedkar led the smaller Drafting Committee responsible for writing the actual text - two distinct jobs. Swapping them is incorrect. They did not co-head the same committee, and both clearly held central roles, so saying neither had a role is plainly wrong.

11. (A) Adopting the text on 26 Nov 1949 and bringing it into effect on 26 Jan 1950 are two distinct steps - first the Assembly accepted it, then it became operative law. It was accepted, not rejected, in 1949. Neither date is Independence Day, which was 15 Aug 1947. And the dates differ precisely because adoption and enforcement were not the same day.

12. (D) Republic Day marks the Constitution taking effect on 26 Jan 1950, making India a republic; freedom from Britain came earlier, on 15 Aug 1947. The two days are different dates. India became free in 1947, not 1950. And the Assembly was formed in 1946, which Republic Day does not commemorate.

13. (B) The Assembly was formed in 1946, India became free in 1947, the Constitution was adopted in 1949, and it came into force in 1950 - that is the true order. The other sequences jumble these dates: 1946 must come before 1947, adoption (1949) cannot precede the Assembly's formation, and listing 1950 first reverses the timeline entirely.

14. (A) The Assembly looked widely and selected ideas that fitted India, blending them with India's own freedom-struggle values - a thoughtful borrowing, not a copy. It did not reproduce one country's document verbatim, nor did it ignore all others. Equally it did not invent everything afresh; the point is selective adaptation, not isolation.

15. (D) Different features came from different sources - Britain for the parliamentary system, the USA for rights, Ireland for directive principles - which is selective borrowing, not wholesale copying of one nation. So claiming it all came from Britain, or all from the USA, is wrong, and saying it borrowed nothing contradicts the very examples given.

16. (C) The struggle for freedom was a struggle for liberty and equality, and the Constitution wrote those very goals into itself. A hereditary monarch contradicts the republican aim the movement sought. Banning elections contradicts the democratic aim, and the movement drew on Indian values rather than rejecting them.

17. (A) Sovereign means India decides its own affairs without outside control, so it need not change a law merely because another country demands it. It is not obliged to obey foreign demands, it does have its own law-making government, and no international body rules over it - that would contradict sovereignty.

18. (B) India being a republic is true, and the defining feature of a republic is exactly that the head of state is elected, not hereditary - so the reason correctly explains the assertion. The reason is not false; it is the very meaning of 'republic'. And the assertion is not false, so the options claiming otherwise are wrong.

19. (C) People choosing their rulers by free and fair elections is the heart of 'Democratic'. 'Socialist' is about reducing inequality of wealth and opportunity, not about elections. 'Sovereign' is about freedom from outside control, and 'Secular' is about equal respect for faiths - none of these is about the act of electing leaders.

20. (B) Socialist points to lessening inequality so wealth and opportunity are spread more fairly. Helping one family grow richest would increase inequality, the opposite of the aim. It does not mean banning all trade, nor abolishing government - that misreads the word entirely.

21. (D) Sovereign, Socialist, Secular, Democratic and Republic together describe the nature of the Indian state. Justice, Liberty, Equality and Fraternity describe the goals the Constitution holds for citizens, so that group is not the answer. The mixed lists wrongly blend state-describing words with citizen-goal words.

22. (B) Deciding defence and external matters free from outside control is exactly what 'Sovereign' guarantees, so no foreign company can set such policy. 'Secular' concerns equal respect for religions, 'Socialist' concerns reducing economic inequality, and 'Republic' concerns having an elected head of state - none of these answers a foreign claim over defence policy.

23. (A) Republic means the head of state is elected, not a king or queen inheriting the office, so hereditary royal rule directly contradicts it. The statement is therefore wrong, not correct. A republic is not rule by religious leaders, and it certainly does not mean having no head of state.

24. (D) Democratic correctly means self-rule by the people through elections. Sovereign means freedom from outside control, so saying India must obey a foreign power reverses it. Republic means an elected head of state, not a hereditary monarch. Secular means equal respect for all faiths, not opposition to religion.

25. (C) Treating rich and poor alike under the law is the essence of Equality, equal status without discrimination. Fraternity is about a spirit of brotherhood, not about equal legal treatment. Liberty is about freedoms of thought and worship, and sovereignty is about the nation's independence, neither of which is the point of treating two persons equally before the law.

26. (A) Speaking freely and choosing one's religion are protected by Liberty - the freedom of thought, expression, belief and worship. Justice is about fair treatment across society, Equality is about equal status and opportunity, and Fraternity is about a spirit of brotherhood - none of these is specifically the freedom to express oneself and worship as one chooses.

27. (A) Fraternity is a spirit of brotherhood and unity, respecting one another's dignity, so living together with mutual respect fits it exactly. Fierce rivalry between regions works against unity. Loyalty only to one's own family is narrow, not the wider brotherhood meant, and obeying a foreign ruler has nothing to do with fraternity among citizens.

28. (B) Helping a disadvantaged group gain fair access to opportunity is social and economic justice - fairness across society. Justice does not mean punishing everyone; that misreads the word. It is not freedom reserved for the rich, nor rule by the strongest - both contradict the idea of fairness for all that justice stands for.

29. (D) Sovereign, democratic and republican self-rule, plus justice, liberty, equality and fraternity, together describe a free, equal and united nation governing itself fairly. A hereditary kingdom contradicts 'republic' and 'democratic'. A single compulsory religion contradicts 'secular', and foreign control contradicts 'sovereign'.

30. (B) Fundamental Rights can be enforced in court, so going to court when a right is violated is exactly such a right in action. Planting trees is a Fundamental Duty, not the enforcement of a right. Parliament debating a tax and the government building a road are ordinary government activities, not the enforcement of a citizen's right.

31. (D) Protecting the environment and public property are responsibilities of citizens, which are Fundamental Duties. They are not Fundamental Rights, which are claims a citizen can enforce in court. Directive Principles guide the government, not citizens, and are not 'binding on courts'. And these duties belong to all citizens, not to ministers alone.

32. (D) Fundamental Rights are enforceable through the courts, whereas Directive Principles guide the government but cannot be enforced there - that is the key contrast. Reversing this is wrong. They are not equally enforceable, since only Rights are court-enforceable, and Directive Principles are not pointless - they shape government policy even though they cannot be enforced.

33. (C) Even without court enforcement, Directive Principles steer the government in making policy and law. They cannot be claimed in court the way Rights can - that is what 'not enforceable' means. They do not override Fundamental Rights, and they are far from useless, since they actively guide governance.

34. (A) Respecting the National Flag and Anthem is a responsibility of citizens, i.e. a Fundamental Duty. The other three all describe going to court to enforce or claim a right, which is what makes them Fundamental Rights, not duties.

35. (C) Adding Fundamental Duties in 1976 shows the Constitution can be amended as needs change - a living document. This directly disproves 'never changed'. The Duties came through India's own amendment process, not a foreign decree, and an occasional amendment is nothing like rewriting the whole document yearly.

36. (A) Directive Principles purposefully direct government policy and law-making, so they matter even without court enforcement. The student is wrong that they are useless. They are not enforceable like Rights, and they are aimed at the State's policy, not binding obligations placed on individual citizens.

37. (A) Rights are court-enforceable protections, Duties are citizens' responsibilities, and Directive Principles are non-enforceable guides for government - each is distinct. Not all three are enforceable alike, since only Rights are. Swapping Rights and Duties is wrong, and claiming Principles are enforceable while Rights are mere goals reverses the truth.

38. (C) A goal the government should pursue but which cannot be enforced in court is the hallmark of a Directive Principle. A Fundamental Right could be enforced in court, so it would not fit 'cannot be challenged'. A Fundamental Duty is a citizen's responsibility, not a government policy, and the Preamble's keywords do in fact connect to the nation's goals, so that option is wrong.

39. (C) 'We, the People' means the people of India are the source of the Constitution's authority - they gave it to themselves. It was not written by a foreign ruler, nor granted down by a king. And it does not hand power solely to the government; rather it roots power in the people.

40. (A) Opening with 'We, the People' shows the Constitution flows from the people themselves. It was not a gift from the British monarch, not an order from the United Nations, and not a decree of the Supreme Court - all of which would place its source outside the people of India.

41. (D) Secularism means freedom to follow any faith and equal respect for all, so a minority faith is fully protected. The citizen need not switch to a common religion - that would deny religious freedom. Secular does not mean the state opposes religion, and no yearly government approval is required to practise one's faith.

42. (C) Secular means treating all faiths with equal respect and letting people freely follow any religion - it is not against religion. The state does not push atheism. It does not permit only one religion, and far from making religion illegal, secularism protects the freedom to practise one's faith.

43. (C) Different faiths celebrated freely with no government favour is exactly secularism: equal respect and no official religion. Sovereignty concerns the nation's independence from outside control, not religious freedom. A compulsory state religion is the opposite of secularism, and the government allowing free celebration shows respect for, not opposition to, religion.

44. (B) Indian secularism means no official state religion and equal respect for all faiths, with citizens free to choose. There is no single official faith. Religion is not forbidden, and no one is forced into the majority religion - all three contradict the freedom and equality at the heart of secularism.

45. (D) Treating people of every religion alike, with no faith favoured, is the practice of secularism. Federalism concerns how power is divided between centre and states, republicanism concerns an elected head of state, and socialism concerns economic inequality - none of these describes equal treatment across religions.

46. (D) Forcing everyone into one official religion destroys religious freedom and equal respect, so it violates secularism. Allowing all faiths to worship, treating religions equally, and letting people change or leave a faith all uphold secularism rather than breaking it.

47. (B) A secular state respects all faiths equally, so it protects both citizens' worship alike. It does not favour the larger religion, it does not oppose religion and so withhold protection, and protection is never tied to payment - all of which would betray the equal respect secularism requires.

48. (A) Being a living document means it can be amended to meet changing needs - that capacity for change is the point. Reading it aloud daily has nothing to do with it. 'Living' is not about its authors being alive, and 'can never be altered' is the exact opposite of a living document.

49. (C) Requiring rigorous debate shows that while the Constitution can be changed, the process is intentionally careful, not casual. This proves change is not forbidden. It is not automatic or yearly, and the need for full parliamentary debate rules out one person changing it secretly.

50. (D) The 1992 Panchayati Raj amendment shows the Constitution adjusting to new needs by amendment. This contradicts the idea that it cannot respond to change. It was amended, not abolished and rewritten, and the change came through India's own process, not a copy of another country.

51. (C) Amendment is possible but it must pass through rigorous parliamentary debate, so it is deliberate rather than casual or open to anyone. The student is therefore wrong. The Constitution can be amended, so 'cannot be amended at all' is false, and no foreign ruler controls Indian amendments.

52. (A) Amendment is a strength because it keeps the Constitution relevant over time, yet change comes only through a deliberate process, balancing stability and flexibility. It does not allow the document to be casually discarded, it is not random or debate-free, and no single official can rewrite it at will.

53. (B) The Constitution can be amended (a living document) and arose from the people of India themselves, as 'We, the People' declares - so both halves of the citizen's claim are wrong. It is not unchangeable or foreign-imposed, it does not change daily or come from a king, and it plainly sets out values and goals in its Preamble.

54. (B) Sharing power between the centre and the states is what a federal structure means. It is not a single all-powerful government with no states, nor one where states hold everything and the centre nothing - federalism balances the two. And it is certainly not rule by one religious leader.

55. (B) It is supreme because every other law must conform to it and even the most powerful officials are bound by it. Its supremacy is not about being a long book or being read at functions. And the very idea of supremacy means it cannot be set aside by whoever is powerful - the opposite of that claim.

56. (A) As the supreme law, the Constitution prevails, so a conflicting law can be struck down. The Constitution does not automatically bend to a new law. The conflict does not cancel both, and being newer does not let an ordinary law override the Constitution - supremacy means the Constitution stands above ordinary legislation.

57. (C) The Constitution is the supreme rulebook the people gave themselves, capable of amendment, which establishes government, secures rights, sets duties and guides national goals - the full picture from the chapter. It is not a fixed foreign list of punishments, not a yearly budget, and not a songbook; each of these misses what the Constitution actually is.

58. (B) It is true the Constitution can change, and the reason - that it is a living document amended carefully, shown by the 1976 and 1992 changes - correctly explains why. The reason is not false; those amendments are real examples. And the assertion is not false, since the Constitution genuinely can be amended.

59. (B) The Constitution guards against concentrated power by separating the three organs and arranging checks and balances so each limits the others. Merging powers into one office creates exactly the danger being guarded against. Letting the executive control the others removes the check, and removing all limits would leave power unchecked - the opposite of the safeguard.

60. (C) A diverse Assembly drawing on many regions, communities and including women means the Constitution reflects a broad cross-section of the nation, not a single group. It was not made to favour the wealthy, nor to speak for one region only, and it was framed by Indians in the Constituent Assembly, not by outsiders.
