Chapter 7: ईशावास्यम् इदं सर्वम् (Ishavasyam Idam Sarvam)

Paper 5 — (progressively harder)

Subject	Sanskrit (NCERT Class 7, Deepakam)
Chapter	7 — ईशावास्यम् इदं सर्वम् (Ishavasyam Idam Sarvam)
Total Questions	60 (Multiple Choice, single correct)
Maximum Marks	240
Suggested Time	90 minutes

Marking scheme: +4 for each correct answer · -1 for each wrong answer · 0 if unattempted.

Instructions: Each question has four options (A), (B), (C), (D); exactly one is correct. P5 traps: reading वास्यम् as an agent/place-noun rather than a gerundive (future passive participle) of वस्; treating भुञ्जीथाः as passive merely because it is ātmanepada; assuming मा गृधः is just 'न + verb' rather than मा + augmentless aorist; mis-deriving the long आ of ईशा as sandhi rather than the instrumental ending; confusing कस्यस्वित् (indefinite genitive) with a plain interrogative; and collapsing the 'is→ought' move so the metaphysical line is mistaken for a command. Do not write on this paper — mark answers on your answer sheet.

1. वास्यम् in ईशावास्यम् is a gerundive (future passive participle). Of the three candidate stems वस् 'to dwell/clothe', वा 'to blow', and वद् 'to speak', only one yields वास्यम् with the required passive 'to-be-...ed' sense. Which, and why?

- (A) वा — its gerundive 'that which is to be blown' fits a wind-image in the verse
- (B) वद् — its gerundive 'that which is to be spoken' fits a recited-mantra image
- (C) none of the three — वास्यम् is a finite verb, not a participle of any root
- (D) वस् — its gerundive 'that which is to be dwelt-in / enveloped' fits 'to be pervaded by the Lord'

2. A gerundive like वास्यम् always shifts the grammatical subject of its clause to the thing acted upon. In ईशावास्यम् इदं सर्वम्, this means the nominative subject of the gerundive-clause is:

- (A) इदं सर्वम् — 'all this' is what is to be pervaded, hence the subject
- (B) ईशा — the Lord, who does the pervading, is the subject

(C) वास्यम् — the participle itself functions as the subject

(D) there is no subject, because gerundives never take a nominative

3. Distinguish a gerundive (वास्यम्) from an ordinary agent noun such as वासी 'a dweller'.

The decisive grammatical contrast is that the gerundive expresses:

(A) who habitually performs the action (active, agent-oriented)

(B) when the action took place (a tense marker)

(C) what is to be / ought to be acted upon (passive, patient-oriented)

(D) where the action happens (a place noun)

4. If a writer wanted the active sense 'the Lord WHO dwells/pervades' instead of the passive gerundive वास्यम् 'to be pervaded', the most apt replacement formed from the same root वस् would be:

(A) वास्यम् itself, since gerundives also carry an active sense

(B) अवास्यम्, by simply prefixing the negative अ-

(C) an agent-form like वासी / वसन् ('dwelling, the one who dwells')

(D) वसति untouched, since a 3rd-person verb cannot describe the Lord

5. The gerundive वास्यम् logically demands a second case besides the nominative patient.

The gloss ईश्वरेण व्याप्तम् supplies it: ईश्वरेण is instrumental. From this, the case the gerundive REQUIRES for its agent is:

(A) the accusative — the agent of a gerundive is its direct object

(B) the instrumental — the agent of a passive/gerundive stands in the instrumental

(C) the dative — the agent is the recipient of the action

(D) the genitive — the agent merely 'owns' the action

6. Why does वास्यम्, despite being built on a root meaning 'to dwell', NOT translate as the concrete place-noun 'a dwelling/house' in this verse?

(A) because वस् can never form a noun of place under any suffix

(B) the gerundive suffix gives a modal-passive sense ('to-be-dwelt-in'), not a concrete-noun sense ('a place to dwell')

(C) because the verse's metre forbids any noun reading

(D) because वास्यम् is actually from a different root meaning 'cloth'

7. तेन त्यक्तेन भुञ्जीथाः. तेन is the instrumental of तद्. Its function relative to त्यक्तेन is to:

(A) serve as the subject 'he/that one' performing भुञ्जीथाः

(B) act as the dative recipient 'to that one'

(C) agree with त्यक्तेन in case (instrumental), as a pronoun pointing to 'that renunciation'

(D) negate त्यक्तेन, giving 'not renounced'

8. In the verse, ईशा (instrumental) and त्यक्तेन (instrumental) both answer 'by what?' yet differ in role. The precise distinction the instrumental case is here doing double duty for is:

(A) ईशा = the AGENT by whom pervading is done; त्यक्तेन = the MEANS by which enjoying is done

(B) ईशा = the means of enjoying; त्यक्तेन = the agent of pervading

(C) both = the agent, since the instrumental marks only agents

(D) both = a location, since the instrumental can mark place

9. त्यक्त (in त्यक्तेन) is the past passive participle of त्यज्. Knowing that, the literal voice-and-time sense embedded in the bare participle त्यक्त is:

(A) '(one who) is renouncing' — active, ongoing

(B) '(one who) will renounce' — active, future (C) 'renounce!' — a command

(D) '(that which has been) renounced' — passive, completed

10. Suppose the verse used the accusative त्यक्तम् instead of the instrumental त्यक्तेन. The meaning would shift to:

(A) no change at all — accusative and instrumental are interchangeable here

(B) 'enjoy for the sake of renunciation' — a purpose reading

(C) 'enjoy the renounced thing' — renunciation becomes the direct OBJECT enjoyed, not the means

(D) 'enjoy in renunciation' — a locative-style 'inside' reading

11. भुञ्जीथाः is ātmanepada (middle). A student reasons 'middle voice = passive, so it means you-are-enjoyed.' The flaw is that in Sanskrit:

(A) ātmanepada is indeed the passive, but the person is wrong

(B) ātmanepada always converts a verb to the future

(C) middle and passive are identical, so the student is right

(D) ātmanepada (middle) marks that the action's fruit returns to the agent ('enjoy for oneself'); it is NOT the passive

12. The optative भुञ्जीथाः (2nd sg) is to be recast for a single THIRD person 'he/she should enjoy', keeping the optative middle. The form is:

(A) भुञ्जीत

(B) भुञ्जीध्वम्

(C) भोक्ष्यते

(D) अभुङ्क्त

13. Identify the single morphological element in भुञ्जीथाः that PROVES it is optative rather than future, present, or past:

(A) the -स्य- future marker, which it contains (B) the past augment अ- prefixed to it

(C) the present reduplication, doubling the first syllable

(D) the optative marker -ई- (the 'yā/ī' element) inserted before the ending

14. Mood-matching: which restatement preserves both the optative 'should/ought' force AND the self-directed (middle) sense of भुञ्जीथाः?

(A) त्वम् भोक्ष्यसे — 'you will enjoy' (future, certainty)

(B) त्वम् अभुङ्क्थाः — 'you enjoyed' (past)

(C) त्वम् भुङ्क्षे — 'you are enjoying' (present fact)

(D) त्वया भोक्तव्यम् — 'it ought to be enjoyed by you' (gerundive of obligation)

15. Why is the optative (not the imperative भुङ्क्ष्व 'enjoy!') especially apt for a verse offering spiritual counsel on detachment?

- (A) the optative is a harsher command than the imperative, forcing obedience
- (B) the optative reports that the enjoyment already happened, lending authority
- (C) the optative voices a recommended 'you should/ought', advising rather than ordering — suiting wise guidance
- (D) the optative leaves the action's reality in doubt, undercutting the counsel

16. A class debates whether भुञ्जीथाः could be re-analysed as a future. The decisive disqualifier is that a true future of भुज् would have to show:

- (A) the augment अ-, which भुञ्जीथाः entirely lacks
- (B) the -स्य-/-ष्य- future infix (e.g. भोक्ष्य-), which भुञ्जीथाः entirely lacks
- (C) reduplication of the root, which a future requires
- (D) a nasal infix, which only futures take

17. गृधः in मा गृधः comes from the root गृध् 'to crave, covet'. The prohibitive मा takes specifically an aorist stem. Therefore गृधः is best parsed as:

- (A) a present-tense 2nd-singular of गृध्, like an ordinary 'you covet'
- (B) a future of गृध् with -स्य- understood but unwritten
- (C) the past-perfect (reduplicated) of गृध्, marking completed action
- (D) an aorist form of गृध् with the past augment अ- DROPPED (the prohibitive's signature)

18. If the prohibitive aorist गृधः were instead written WITH its augment as अगृधः and the मा removed, the form अगृधः would by itself mean:

- (A) 'do not covet' — still a prohibition even without मा
- (B) 'you will covet' — a future
- (C) 'you coveted' — an ordinary (augmented) aorist past, 'did covet'
- (D) 'covet!' — a command

19. Two students propose subjects for मा गृधः. P: '3rd person — let him not covet.' Q: '2nd person — you, do not covet.' The verb-ending of गृधः settles it as:

- (A) 3rd person singular — 'let him not covet', so P is right
- (B) 2nd person singular — 'you (sg), do not covet', so Q is right
- (C) 1st person singular — 'let me not covet'
- (D) the ending is ambiguous between all three persons

20. Why does the prohibitive insist on the aorist stem (गृधः) rather than the present-imperative stem (which would give मा गृहीहि)?

- (A) classical Sanskrit prescribes मा with the augmentless AORIST as the standard prohibition; the present-imperative stem is not the canonical choice
(B) the present stem गृहीहि is simply a misspelling of the aorist
(C) the aorist stem alone can carry future meaning, which a prohibition needs
(D) the two stems are equivalent, so गृहीहि is equally correct

21. Knowing the root गृध् 'to crave', the noun गृध्नु means 'greedy'. This tells us the inner state मा गृधः forbids is best captured as:

- (A) covetousness — an inner craving to possess
(B) physical theft only — the outward act of seizing
(C) ignorance — a failure of knowledge (D) anger — a flaring of temper

22. A grammarian notes that मा cannot simply be swapped for न in this clause. State the functional contrast that makes them non-interchangeable:

- (A) न forbids actions while मा denies propositions — exactly the reverse
(B) मा forbids an action (a command 'do not'); न denies a proposition (a statement 'is not / does not')
(C) मा is the plural negative and न the singular negative
(D) मा negates verbs and न negates only nouns, so both could fit here

23. कस्यस्वित् in कस्यस्विद्धनम् = कस्य + स्वित्. The base कस्य is the genitive of किम्. Adding स्वित् changes its force to:

- (A) a definite genitive naming one specific person — 'of that man'
(B) an instrumental — 'by whom' (C) a vocative — 'O whose one!'
(D) an INDEFINITE genitive — 'of whosoever / of anyone at all'

24. Read as a rhetorical question, कस्यस्विद्धनम् ('whose, after all, is wealth?') strengthens मा गृधः because the implied answer is:

- (A) the strongest person's — wealth belongs to whoever can seize it
(B) only the priests' — laypeople have no claim and so must not covet
(C) no one's absolutely — since all is pervaded by the Lord, no wealth is truly anyone's to be coveted
(D) the king's alone — the sovereign owns all wealth

25. Why does the INDEFINITE कस्यस्वित् close a loophole that a plain genitive कस्य ('of whom') would leave open?

- (A) it restricts the ban to one named person's wealth, exempting all others
(B) it converts the prohibition into a mere question with no force
(C) it weakens the ban by leaving the owner unspecified, so it binds no one
(D) it extends the prohibition to ANYONE'S wealth without exception, so no particular person's wealth is fair to covet

26. Distinguish the genitive in कस्यस्विद्धनम् ('whose-ever wealth') from the instrumental ईशा and त्यक्तेन. The genitive specifically expresses:

- (A) agency — 'by (someone)', the doer of an action
- (B) means — 'by (something)', the instrument used
- (C) recipient — 'to/for (someone)'
- (D) possession / relation — 'of (someone), belonging to'

27. ईशावास्यम् results from ईशा + वास्यम्. A student claims it shows the savarṇa-dīrgha rule (आ + अ → आ). Why is this analysis WRONG here?

- (A) because आ + अ actually yields the diphthong ऐ, not आ, so the rule misfires
- (B) because ईशा ends in अ, not आ, so no long vowel is present to merge
- (C) because savarṇa-dīrgha applies only across word boundaries, never within a phrase
- (D) वास्यम् begins with the consonant व, so no vowel-merger occurs; the long आ of ईशा is the instrumental ending, not a sandhi product

28. इदम् + सर्वम् appears as इदं सर्वम्. Resolve the sandhi mechanism precisely:

- (A) word-final म् before a sibilant becomes visarga (ः)
- (B) word-final म् doubles to म् before स
- (C) word-final म् before a following consonant is written as anusvāra (ं)
- (D) word-final म् is elided, the vowel before it lengthening in compensation

29. कस्यस्वित् + धनम् → कस्यस्विद्धनम्. The change त् → द् at the seam is which kind of sandhi?

- (A) aspiration sandhi — त् takes on the aspiration of ध and becomes थ्
- (B) visarga sandhi — त् becomes visarga before an aspirate
- (C) voicing assimilation — a final unvoiced त् becomes voiced द् before the voiced ध
- (D) nasal sandhi — त् becomes the nasal न् before ध

30. Run the sandhi BACKWARDS: given the surface form कस्यस्विद्धनम्, the two underlying words before junction are:

- (A) कस्यस्वित् + धनम्
- (B) कस्यस्विद् + धनम् (with द् already final)
- (C) कस्यः + स्विद्धनम्
- (D) कस्य + स्विद्धनम्

31. Why is the सर्वम् of इदं सर्वम् NOT subject to any consonant-junction sandhi with the preceding word, whereas इदम् changed to इदं?

- (A) सर्वम् is exempt because it is in the nominative case
- (B) सर्वम् begins the change on its left neighbour (म्□□); सर्वम् itself starts with a vowel-letter-free स but it is the FOLLOWING word, so it only triggers, not undergoes, the change
- (C) सर्वम् underwent sandhi too, becoming सर्वः before the next word
- (D) सर्वम् begins with a vowel, so no consonant sandhi is possible

32. Joining the two PĀDAS, the full first line is ईशावास्यम् इदं सर्वं यत्किञ्च जगत्यां जगत्. Here सर्वम् appears as सर्वं before यत्. The reason is the SAME mechanism as in इदं, namely:

- (A) final म् → anusvāra (ं) before the following consonant य
- (B) final म् → visarga before a semivowel like य
- (C) final म् → the nasal ङ before य
- (D) final म् is dropped because two म्-final words may not stand together

33. यत्किञ्च (in यत्किञ्च जगत्यां जगत्) is built from यत् + किम् + चित्/च. Its grammatical-semantic function is to be:

- (A) a restrictive relative — 'only that one thing', narrowing सर्वम्
- (B) an indefinite relative — 'whatsoever, anything at all', universalising सर्वम्
- (C) an interrogative — 'which thing?', turning the line into a question
- (D) a temporal adverb — 'whenever', marking time

34. In जगत्यां जगत्, the SAME stem जगत् appears twice. जगत्याम् (locative) versus जगत् (nominative) contrast as:

- (A) 'in the world (as the container/universe)' versus 'the moving thing (each transient creature/object within it)'
- (B) 'by the world' (instrumental) versus 'to the world' (dative)
- (C) 'O world!' (vocative) versus 'of the world' (genitive)
- (D) 'the world moved' (past verb) versus 'the world will move' (future verb)

35. The locative जगत्याम् answers the question:

- (A) 'where? / in what?' — naming the location
- (B) 'by what means?' — naming the instrument
- (C) 'to whom?' — naming the recipient
- (D) 'whose?' — naming the possessor

36. The repetition जगत्यां जगत् pairs a locative with a nominative of one root chiefly to:

- (A) mark emphasis by mere duplication, with no meaning difference between the two
- (B) create a past-then-future time sequence within the world
- (C) contrast the encompassing world with every transient thing it contains, extending सर्वम् to literally everything that moves
- (D) name two separate worlds, an inner and an outer

37. जगत् derives from the root गम् 'to go/move' (with reduplication). This etymology tells us the noun's core sense is:

- (A) 'that which is fixed' — the unchanging firmament
- (B) 'that which is owned' — property
- (C) 'that which moves' — the moving/transient world
- (D) 'that which is spoken' — a recited text

38. Map the four pādas of the full verse to their grammatical centre of gravity. The first half (lines 1–2) and the second half (lines 3–4) are governed, respectively, by:

- (A) two finite past verbs and two future verbs
- (B) an imperative and an indicative statement of fact

(C) a gerundive predicate (वास्यम् 'to be pervaded') and finite verbal moods (भुञ्जीथाः optative, गृधः prohibitive)

(D) a question in the first half answered by a statement in the second

39. Syntactically, तेन त्यक्तेन attaches to भुञ्जीथाः as its instrumental adjunct. The whole clause तेन त्यक्तेन भुञ्जीथाः therefore parses as:

(A) 'you should enjoy BY that renunciation' — verb governed by an instrumental of means

(B) 'that renounced one should enjoy' — तेन as nominative subject of the verb

(C) 'enjoy that renunciation' — त्यक्तेन as the accusative object

(D) 'renunciation is enjoyed by that' — a passive with त्यक्त as subject

40. Across the whole verse, ईशा, इदम्, सर्वम्, and जगत् carry the SAME syntactic relation in the first half. That relation is best described as:

(A) all four are nominatives forming a list of subjects

(B) इदम्/सर्वम्/जगत् share the nominative (the pervaded subject), while ईशा alone is the instrumental agent — so three nominatives plus one instrumental

(C) all four are instrumentals naming four agents

(D) all four are accusatives, the objects of pervading

41. The verse moves from a metaphysical claim to two ethical directives. Logically, line 1 functions as the ____ and lines 3–4 as the ____:

(A) conclusion — premises, in reverse order

(B) premise (an 'is': all is the Lord's) — conclusions (an 'ought': enjoy with detachment, do not covet)

(C) two unrelated assertions placed side by side

(D) a command — its factual justification, the command coming first

42. Make the logic explicit: 'All is pervaded by the Lord; THEREFORE you should enjoy with detachment and not covet anyone's wealth.' The suppressed middle premise that makes this valid is:

(A) because the Lord is all-powerful, He will punish anyone who enjoys the world

(B) because the world is unreal, enjoyment and coveting are equally meaningless

(C) because all is the Lord's, nothing is anyone's exclusive property — so grasping/coveting has no basis

(D) because wealth is pleasant, one is naturally drawn to enjoy it

43. A reader argues: 'भुञ्जीथाः tells me to enjoy, so detachment cannot really matter — I may grasp freely.' The instrumental त्यक्तेन refutes this by specifying that the enjoyment is:

(A) enjoyment AFTER renunciation — first give up everything, then enjoy later

(B) enjoyment OF renunciation — renunciation itself is the thing relished

(C) enjoyment BY MEANS OF renunciation — i.e. enjoyment held without grasping

(D) enjoyment DESPITE renunciation — pleasure that overrides letting-go

44. A student claims the verse teaches world-denial (the world is an illusion to flee). Which single verse-word most directly refutes this?

- (A) भुञ्जीथाः — 'you should ENJOY', presupposing a real world worth engaging
- (B) त्यक्तेन — 'by renunciation', proving the world must be abandoned
- (C) ईशा — 'by the Lord', proving the world is the Lord's illusion
- (D) गृधः — 'covet', proving desire is the only reality

45. ईशावास्यम् इदं सर्वम् + the chapter-epithet सर्वशक्तिमान् ('all-powerful') TOGETHER ground the non-greed command because:

- (A) an all-powerful Lord will seize human wealth, so one should hide it from Him
- (B) since the Lord is powerful, He restrains human greed for us, so we need not
- (C) the Lord's power operates only in temples, so greed outside temples is permitted
- (D) a Lord who both pervades all AND possesses all power is the true owner of everything, so human claims of exclusive ownership — the root of greed — collapse

46. Applying the verse: a merchant keeps running his shop but stops obsessing over profit and treats his wealth as held in trust. This most faithfully embodies which verse-word(s)?

- (A) मा गृधः read as 'abandon all trade', so he ought to shut the shop
- (B) सर्वशक्तिमान्, the epithet now describing his power over money
- (C) कुलकलङ्कः, since keeping any wealth disgraces his family
- (D) तेन त्यक्तेन भुञ्जीथाः — using/enjoying the world (his trade) through inner detachment

47. A debater insists मा गृधः forbids only THEFT (forcibly taking another's wealth). Why is that too narrow, given the root गृध्?

- (A) गृध् means 'to give', so the verse concerns generosity, not theft
- (B) गृध् means 'to guard', so the verse only forbids hoarding, not theft
- (C) गृध् means to CRAVE/covet — an inner desire; the verse forbids the craving itself, of which theft is only one outward fruit
- (D) the verse addresses only priests' wealth, leaving ordinary theft untouched

48. भुञ्जीथाः carries the personal ending -थाः. Identify what that ending simultaneously encodes (besides the optative mood):

- (A) 3rd person, plural, parasmaipada — 'they (others)'
- (B) 2nd person, singular, ātmanepada (middle) — '(for) you (one person), self-directed'
- (C) 1st person, singular, passive — '(by) me'
- (D) 2nd person, plural, parasmaipada — 'you all (others-directed)'

49. The chapter says the wise honour the all-pervading Lord ध्यानेन नामकीर्तनेन च. Both -एन words are instrumental. A reader takes नामकीर्तनेन as the OBJECT worshipped. The case refutes this because the instrumental marks:

- (A) the MEANS by which the Lord is remembered (worshipped BY Name-chanting), with the Lord himself the accusative object
- (B) the direct object, so Name-chanting is the thing worshipped instead of the Lord

(C) the place, so 'inside the Name-chanting' the Lord dwells

(D) the recipient, so the chant is given 'to' the Lord

50. Re-deploying vocabulary: ईश and ईश्वर both descend from ईश् 'to rule/own'. A reader claims ईश in ईशावास्यम् means the same '-ish' as English 'childish'. The category error is that:

(A) both are suffixes meaning 'somewhat like', so the comparison is exact

(B) ईश is a full Sanskrit noun ('Lord', from root ईश्), whereas English '-ish' is a bound suffix meaning 'somewhat like'; they share only a sound

(C) '-ish' descends from the same Sanskrit root ईश्, so the two are cognate

(D) ईश is a suffix too, simply written in Devanagari instead of Roman letters

51. The verse's all-pervading Supreme is the impersonal Absolute. Among ब्रह्म (neuter), ब्रह्मन् (masc.), ब्रह्मा (masc.), the term whose grammatical GENDER signals it is the right referent is:

(A) the NEUTER ब्रह्म — neuter gender marks the impersonal Absolute that pervades all

(B) the masculine ब्रह्मन् — a personal priest, hence the worshipper in the verse

(C) the masculine ब्रह्मा — the personal creator-god who makes the world

(D) any of the three, since gender does not change which entity is meant

52. Substitution test: a sentence reads ब्रह्मा जगत् असृजत् ('Brahmā created the world').

Replacing ब्रह्मा with the neuter ब्रह्म would be wrong because:

(A) creating the world is the act of the PERSONAL creator-god ब्रह्मा, not of the impersonal Absolute ब्रह्म

(B) ब्रह्म is feminine and cannot agree with the verb असृजत्

(C) ब्रह्म means 'a priest', who does not create worlds

(D) the two are interchangeable, so the substitution is harmless

53. सर्वशक्तिमान् = सर्व + शक्ति + -म् (with -मान् the masc. nom. sg.). A student reads it 'one who owns many machines'. The grammatical error is that the suffix -म्/-मान् marks:

(A) the plural number, hence 'many (machines)'

(B) the past tense, hence 'owned'

(C) the dative case, hence 'for the machines'

(D) possession of a QUALITY (here all-power), not ownership of countable objects

54. Why does the possessive suffix surface as -मान् (शक्तिमान्) rather than -वान् (as in भगवान्)?

(A) -मान् marks the future and -वान् the past, so the meaning differs

(B) -मान् means 'possessing' and -वान् means 'lacking'

(C) the two are random spelling variants chosen at the writer's whim

(D) after a stem ending in -इ/-उ (here शक्ति-), the possessive takes the -म्/-मान् form; -वत्/-वान् attaches elsewhere

55. कुलकलङ्कः = कुल ('family') + कलङ्क ('stain'). Within the verse's ethic, this label is the moral OPPOSITE of:

- (A) a more shameful relative who disgraces the family even worse
- (B) the detached, reverent person who enjoys without coveting and honours the all-pervading Lord
- (C) the creator-god ब्रह्मा, who fashions the family
- (D) a future-tense verb describing the family's fortunes

56. Synthesis — which single sentence is correct across MEANING, SANDHI, GRAMMAR, and ETHIC?

- (A) ईशावास्यम् = ईश (vocative) + अवास्यम्; इदम्+सर्वम्→इदः सर्वम् by visarga; भुञ्जीथाः is future; मा गृधः is a plain present statement — so the wise may hoard
- (B) ईशावास्यम् = ईशा (instr.) + वास्यम् (gerundive) 'to be pervaded by the Lord'; इदम्+सर्वम्→इदं सर्वम् by anusvāra; भुञ्जीथाः is optative middle 'you should enjoy'; मा गृधः is the prohibitive 'do not covet' — so: enjoy with detachment, covet nothing
- (C) ईशावास्यम् has a genitive ईश; इदं सर्वम् means 'one temple'; भुञ्जीथाः is past; मा गृधः means 'do covet' — so greed is praised
- (D) ईशा is nominative; त्यक्तेन is accusative; भुञ्जीथाः is imperative; गृधः is a noun — so renunciation is the thing enjoyed

57. Voice check: Student P renders भुञ्जीथाः 'you should enjoy'; Student Q renders it 'you will be enjoyed'. The correct verdict, on voice and mood, is:

- (A) Q is right — the middle ending makes it a passive 'you will be enjoyed'
- (B) both are right — middle and passive renderings are equivalent here
- (C) neither is right — the form is 3rd-person past 'they enjoyed'
- (D) P is right — भुञ्जीथाः is an active-sense middle (ātmanepada) optative 'you should enjoy', not a passive

58. A king who has internalised ईशावास्यम् इदं सर्वम् must decide how to treat the kingdom's resources. The verse's ethic most precisely directs him to:

- (A) seize every resource as royal property, since the king owns the land
- (B) govern and enjoy the resources as a trustee — held in the Lord's name — without grasping them as personal property
- (C) abandon the throne entirely, since owning anything is forbidden
- (D) neglect the resources, since the world is the Lord's concern, not his

59. Abstracting the principle shared by both the positive भुञ्जीथाः and the negative मा गृधः, the single unifying virtue is:

- (A) asceticism — rejecting the world and its goods altogether
- (B) non-attachment (detachment) — engaging the world fully yet without possessive craving
- (C) acquisitiveness — accumulating as much as possible for oneself
- (D) indifference — caring nothing for the world either way

60. Final integration — which chain correctly orders the verse's reasoning from grammar to ethic WITHOUT error?

- (A) ईशा (instrumental agent) makes 'all this' to-be-pervaded by the Lord → so nothing is anyone's exclusive own → so भुञ्जीथाः (optative): enjoy with detachment, and मा गृधः (prohibitive): do not covet anyone's (कस्यस्वित्) wealth
- (B) ईशा (nominative subject) is pervaded by the world → so all is ours to grab → so भुञ्जीथाः (future): you will enjoy what you seize
- (C) ईशा (genitive) means the world belongs to one priest → so only he may enjoy → so मा गृधः (a polite request): please do covet for him
- (D) त्यक्तेन (accusative object) is the thing enjoyed → so renunciation alone is relished → so भुञ्जीथाः (imperative) commands withdrawal from the world

Worked Solutions

1. (D) A gerundive carries the force 'fit/about to be acted upon'. Only the root meaning 'to dwell in / clothe' produces the sense 'to be dwelt-in, enveloped, pervaded', which matches 'pervaded by the Lord'. The wind and speech roots give meanings absent from the verse, and the word is a participle, not a finite verb.

2. (A) Because a gerundive is passive, the patient (the thing pervaded) becomes the nominative subject while the agent stands in the instrumental. So 'all this' is the subject and the Lord (instrumental) the agent; the participle is the predicate, not the subject.

3. (C) A gerundive is patient-oriented and modal: 'that which is to be dwelt-in'. An agent noun like वासी names the doer. The difference is voice and orientation (patient vs agent), not tense or place.

4. (C) To express the active 'one who dwells/pervades' you need an agentive form (a participle like वसन् or an agent noun like वासी), not the passive gerundive. Prefixing अ- would negate it, and the question asks for a noun/participle naming the Lord as agent.

5. (B) Passive constructions (including gerundives) put the agent in the instrumental ('by X'). The gloss confirms this with instrumental ईश्वरेण = ईशा. The accusative marks an object, the dative a recipient, the genitive a possessor — none is the passive agent.

6. (B) The specific suffix on वास्यम् is the gerundive, whose force is 'fit/ought to be acted upon' — passive and verbal, not a concrete location. A different (krit) suffix could make a place-noun, but that is not the form here.

7. (C) Pronouns agree in case with the noun they qualify. तेन (instrumental of तद्) agrees with instrumental त्यक्तेन: 'by that renunciation'. It is not a nominative subject, not a dative, and carries no negation.

8. (A) The instrumental marks both agent (in passives) and means/instrument. Here ईशा is the divine agent of the gerundive 'pervaded', while त्यक्तेन is the means of the action 'enjoy'. The roles are not swapped, and neither is a location.

9. (D) A past passive participle names the patient of a completed action: 'that which has been abandoned/renounced'. It is passive (patient-oriented) and perfective, not an active present, a future, or an imperative.

10. (C) The accusative would make 'the renounced (thing)' the object enjoyed, losing the intended 'by means of renunciation'. Only the instrumental gives the 'by/through' sense; the case is not interchangeable, and it yields neither a purpose nor an 'inside' reading.

11. (D) Middle (ātmanepada) signals the fruit of the action accrues to the agent — here 'you should enjoy (for yourself)'. The passive is a distinct formation. So the active 'you should enjoy' is right; 'you are enjoyed' confuses middle with passive.

12. (A) भुञ्जीत is the 3rd-singular optative middle ('he/she should enjoy'). भुञ्जीध्वम् is 2nd-plural optative, भोक्ष्यते is future, and अभुङ्क्त is a past form — none is the 3rd-singular optative.

13. (D) The optative is built with the modal -ई-/-यात्/-इय- element; भुञ्जीथाः shows it (-ई- before -थाः). It has no -स्य- (so not future), no अ- augment (so not past-imperfect), and no reduplication marking a present-class peculiarity that would settle tense.

14. (D) The gerundive भोक्तव्यम् carries the same 'ought/should' modality as the optative. Future, past, and present forms each report a certainty or a fact, losing the counselled 'should'.

- 15. (C) The optative expresses what one ought to do — counsel, not a blunt order. That gentler modality fits sapiential teaching. It is not stronger than the imperative, not a past report, and not an expression of doubt about whether enjoyment is real.
- 16. (B) Sanskrit futures are marked by -स्य-/-ष्य- (भोक्ष्यते etc.). भुञ्जीथाः has no such infix, so it cannot be a future. The augment marks a past, reduplication marks a perfect/some presents, and the nasal infix marks certain present classes — none is a future marker.
- 17. (D) The classical prohibitive is ण + augmentless aorist. So गृधः is an aorist of गृध् minus the अ- augment. It is not a present, has no -स्य- future, and is not a reduplicated perfect.
- 18. (C) Restoring the augment अ- yields the ordinary aorist past 'you coveted'. The prohibition lives in the combination ण + augmentless stem; remove ण and restore the augment and you get a plain past statement, not a prohibition, future, or command.
- 19. (B) The personal ending of गृधः is 2nd-singular, addressing 'you'. So the prohibition is to the listener, supporting Q. It is not 3rd or 1st person, and the ending is not ambiguous across persons.
- 20. (A) The fixed idiom is ण + augmentless aorist. मा गृहीहि mixes in the present-imperative stem, which the strict construction avoids. The forms are not equivalent, and the rule has nothing to do with future meaning.
- 21. (A) The root sense is craving/coveting, an inner desire; गृध् 'greedy' confirms it. So the prohibition targets covetousness itself, of which theft is merely one outward fruit; it is not about ignorance or anger.
- 22. (B) ण is the particle of prohibition (a command not to act); न negates declarative statements of fact. The roles are not reversed, they do not mark number, and न is not restricted to nouns.
- 23. (D) The particle स्विच् attaches to interrogatives to make them indefinite; कस्य + स्विच् = 'of anyone whatever'. It stays a genitive (it does not become instrumental or vocative) and is the opposite of pinning down one named person.
- 24. (C) The indefinite 'whose-ever' invites the answer 'ultimately no one's', because the first line has placed all things within the Lord. That dissolves the premise of private ownership behind coveting. It does not award wealth to the strong, the priests, or the king.
- 25. (D) Making 'whose' indefinite covers every possible owner, leaving no exception. A specific 'of whom' could be read as banning only one person's wealth. The indefinite does not narrow, neutralise, or weaken the prohibition — it universalises it.
- 26. (D) The genitive marks possession or relation ('whose wealth'). Agency and means are the work of the instrumental (ईशा, त्यक्तेन); the recipient is the dative. The contrast is exactly what makes the verse's 'whose wealth?' a question of ownership.

27. (D) Sandhi between vowels needs a vowel on each side of the seam. Here the second word begins with व (a consonant), so there is no vowel-junction at all; the long आ is simply the instrumental case-ending of ईश. There is no आ+अ merger to invoke.

28. (C) A word-final म् before a consonant within the same utterance is regularly written as anusvāra: इदम् → इदं. It does not become visarga, double, or drop with compensatory lengthening.

29. (C) A final unvoiced stop assimilates in voicing to a following voiced sound: त् + ध → द्ध (the त् voices to द्). It does not aspirate to थ्, become a visarga, or nasalise to न्.

30. (A) Undoing the voicing assimilation restores the unvoiced final त्: कस्यस्वित् + धनम्. The form is not underlyingly कस्यस्विद् (the द् is the sandhi product), nor does it split at a visarga or after कस्य alone — स्वित् is a unit attached to कस्य.

31. (B) The anusvāra change applies to the FINAL म् of the first word (इदम्) because a consonant (स) follows. सर्वम् is that following word: it conditions the change but is not itself altered at this seam. Its exemption is positional, not a matter of case, and it does not begin with a vowel.

32. (A) Exactly as इदम् → इदं before स, सर्वम् → सर्व before य: a final म् before a consonant becomes anusvāra. It does not become visarga, the velar nasal ङ्, or get dropped.

33. (B) यत् (relative) + किम्/किञ्च (indefinitised) yields 'whatsoever', sweeping in everything and reinforcing सर्वम्. It does not narrow to one thing, ask a question, or mark time.

34. (A) जगत्याम् is locative — the world as the encompassing place; the second जगत् is nominative — each moving thing within it. The contrast is container vs content. Neither form is instrumental, dative, vocative, genitive, or a finite verb.

35. (A) The locative answers 'where/in what': 'in the world'. 'By what means' is the instrumental, 'to whom' the dative, 'whose' the genitive.

36. (C) The figure sets the world-as-place against each moving thing in it, driving home that absolutely everything is included. It is not empty duplication, not a tense sequence, and not two different worlds.

37. (C) Built on गम् 'to move', जगत् literally means 'the moving (thing)', i.e. the transient world. It does not mean the fixed, the owned, or the spoken.

38. (C) Lines 1–2 turn on the gerundive 'all this is to-be-pervaded by the Lord'; lines 3–4 turn on two finite moods — the optative 'you should enjoy' and the prohibitive 'do not covet'. They are not past/future, not imperative/indicative, and not a question/answer pair.

39. (A) तेन त्यक्तेन (both instrumental) name the means; भुञ्जीथाः is the optative verb. The clause is 'enjoy by that renunciation'. तेन is not a nominative subject, त्यक्तेन is not an accusative object, and the verb is not passive.

40. (B) इदम्, सर्वम्, and जगत् are nominatives naming what is pervaded; ईशा stands apart as the instrumental agent. They do not all share one case — the agent/patient split is precisely the verse's point.

41. (B) Line 1 states a fact (all is pervaded by the Lord) that GROUNDS the duties of lines 3–4; this is the classic 'is→ought' move. The order is fact-then-duty, the lines are related, and line 1 is not itself a command.

42. (C) The bridge is the denial of absolute private ownership: if all is the Lord's, no wealth is truly 'mine' or 'another's' to covet. Remove that and 'all is the Lord's' alone does not forbid coveting. Punishment, unreality, and pleasantness are not the load-bearing premise.

43. (C) त्यक्तेन is the instrumental of means: one enjoys THROUGH renunciation (non-clinging). It is not a temporal 'after', not the object 'of' enjoyment, and not 'despite'. So grasping is precisely excluded.

44. (A) If the verse said to enjoy the world, the world is real and good to live in — only not to be grasped. त्यक्तेन qualifies HOW one holds it (non-clinging), not that it is illusory; ईशा and गृधः do not assert illusion.

45. (D) All-pervasion plus omnipotence make the Lord the real owner of all; that dissolves the private-ownership basis of greed and places the duty of non-coveting on the person. The other options misread the epithet as a threat, an excuse, or a spatial limit.

46. (D) Continuing rightful livelihood while releasing attachment is exactly 'enjoyment through renunciation'. The verse does not demand abandoning livelihood; सर्वशक्तिमान् describes the Lord, and the merchant (acting rightly) is not a कुलकलङ्क.

47. (C) The root denotes inner craving; forbidding it reaches the desire behind every grasping act, theft included but not limited to it. गृध् does not mean 'give' or 'guard', and the prohibition is universal (कस्यचित्), not priest-specific.

48. (B) The ending -थाः is the 2nd-singular ātmanepada (middle) personal ending; it fixes person (2nd), number (singular), and pada (middle, fruit to the agent). It is not 3rd-plural, not 1st-singular, not passive, and not the 2nd-plural form.

49. (A) The instrumental -एन on ध्यान/नामकीर्तन names the MEANS of remembering; the Lord is the accusative object of the remembering. So one worships the Lord BY meditation and Name-chanting — the chant is the instrument, not the object, place, or recipient.

50. (B) ईश is an independent noun 'Lord' (root ईश् 'to rule/own'); '-ish' is an English bound suffix of resemblance. They are unrelated except by accidental sound. ईश is not a suffix and is not cognate with '-ish'.

51. (A) Gender is meaning-bearing here: the neuter ब्रह्म is the impersonal Absolute, matching the verse's all-pervading Supreme. ब्रह्मन् (masc.) is a priest and ब्रह्मा (masc.) the creator-god — both personal, hence not the referent. Gender is decisive, not irrelevant.

52. (A) World-creation belongs to the personal deity ब्रह्मा; the impersonal ब्रह्म does not 'create' in this narrative sense. ब्रह्म is neuter (not feminine) and means the Absolute (not a priest); the words are not interchangeable.

53. (D) The possessive -मत्/-वत् attaches to a quality-noun (शक्ति) to mean 'possessing that quality' = 'all-powerful'. It is not a plural, a tense, or a case-ending; 'machines' misreads quality-possession as object-ownership.

54. (D) The -मत् vs -वत् choice is conditioned by the preceding sound: after -इ/-उ stems like शक्ति-, the -मत्/-मान् allomorph appears. Both mean 'possessing'; neither is a tense marker, and the choice is rule-governed, not random.

55. (B) The कुलकलङ्क — one whose grasping, hoarding conduct shames his family — is the inverse of the verse's ideal: the reverent, detached, non-coveting person. It is not 'a worse relative', not a deity, and not a verb.

56. (B) Only the first option gets every element right: instrumental ईशा with gerundive वास्यम्, anusvāra sandhi इदं सर्वम्, optative भुञ्जीथाः, prohibitive मा गृधः, and the detached-enjoyment/non-greed ethic. Each other option contains at least one false case, sandhi, mood, meaning, or ethical inversion.

57. (D) Ātmanepada is middle, not passive: the agent enjoys for himself ('you should enjoy'). Q confuses middle with passive; the renderings are not equivalent; and the ending is 2nd-singular optative, not a 3rd-person past.

58. (B) Detached enjoyment-as-trusteeship — using and benefiting without claiming absolute ownership — is the verse's direct application. It rules out possessive seizure, total abdication, and negligent indifference alike.

59. (B) Both the call to enjoy and the ban on coveting flow from non-attachment: full engagement without grasping. It is neither world-rejecting asceticism, nor acquisitiveness, nor indifference.

60. (A) The valid chain runs: instrumental ईशा = agent → 'all this' is pervaded (gerundive) → no exclusive ownership → optative 'should enjoy' detached + prohibitive

'do not covet' anyone's wealth. The other chains miscase ईशा/त्यक्तेन, mis-mood भुञ्जीथाः/मा गृधः, and invert the ethic.
