Chapter 12: वीराङ्गना पन्नाधायी (Panna Dhai, the Brave)

Paper 3 — (progressively harder)

Subject	Sanskrit (NCERT Class 7, Deepakam)
Chapter	12 — वीराङ्गना पन्नाधायी (Panna Dhai, the Brave)
Total Questions	60 (Multiple Choice, single correct)
Maximum Marks	240
Suggested Time	90 minutes

Marking scheme: +4 for each correct answer · -1 for each wrong answer · 0 if unattempted.

Instructions: Each question has four options (A), (B), (C), (D); exactly one is correct. Watch the Paper-3 traps: the dead boy is Panna's OWN son, not the prince and not Panna herself; मारयितुम् (-तुम्) is the infinitive 'to kill', while अमारयत् is past, मारयिष्यति future, मारयतु imperative; the cardinal 'sixteen' is षोडश but the ordinal 'sixteenth' is षोडशम्; दुष्ट means wicked (moral) while मूर्ख means foolish (intellect); राजगृह is a place (palace) but राजपुत्र is a person (prince); छलेन / स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः / वीराङ्गनासु carry case-endings that change the meaning (by-means-of, in, among) — do not read them as simple nominatives. Do not write on this paper — mark answers on your answer sheet.

1. A student lists four claims about पन्नाधायी: (i) she was a वीराङ्गना, (ii) she was a धायी, (iii) she was the prince's birth-mother, (iv) she lived in the 16th century. How many are correct?

- (A) Three (i, ii and iv) (B) All four
(C) Two (i and iv only) (D) Only one (i)

2. The prince Panna protected was Udai Singh II. From which ruling line of Mewar does he come, and roughly when did he reign?

- (A) The Maurya line, in the 3rd century BCE (B) The Gupta line, in the 4th century CE
(C) The Maharana lineage of Mewar, in the 1500s (16th century)
(D) The Mughal line, in the 17th century

3. Why is calling पन्नाधायी merely a 'servant' (सेविका) an inadequate description, given the chapter?

- (A) Because she was actually the queen of Mewar
(B) Because she was the prince's army commander

(C) Because she never worked in the palace at all

(D) Because the chapter honours her as a वीराङ्गना — a brave heroine — for a sacrifice, not merely as paid help

4. The chapter is a historical account (ऐतिहासिक) rather than a fable. Which feature best supports that classification?

(A) It names a real ruler (Udai Singh) and a real kingdom (Mewar) in a datable century

(B) It has talking animals who teach a lesson

(C) It explains a scientific process step by step

(D) It is set in an imaginary land with no date

5. If a quiz asks 'Who finally became king thanks to Panna's act?', the correct answer is the boy who:

(A) died in the prince's bed — Panna's own son

(B) survived because another child was killed in his place — the prince Udai Singh

(C) carried out the killing — the assassin (D) ruled before the plot — the old king

6. Place the four story events in correct order: (P) the assassin strikes in the bedroom; (Q) Panna swaps her son into the prince's bed; (R) a दुष्टबुद्धि rival hatches a कुतन्त्रम्; (S) Panna's name is honoured स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः.

(A) Q → R → P → S

(B) R → Q → P → S

(C) R → P → Q → S

(D) S → R → Q → P

7. षोडशे शतके is in the locative (सप्तमी) case. What does the case ending here signal about the 16th century?

(A) 'To' the sixteenth century — a destination

(B) 'By' the sixteenth century — an instrument

(C) 'Of' the sixteenth century — possession

(D) 'In / during' the sixteenth century — it marks the time-frame of the events

8. धाया is glossed in the chapter as धात्री. Both words share a sense root. What do they jointly mean?

(A) A foster-mother / wet-nurse who nourishes and rears a child

(B) A patient, courageous warrior

(C) A royal bedroom in the palace

(D) A clever scheme to deceive

9. धाया and धैर्य sound related but differ in vowels (आ vs ऐ). A student who confuses them would wrongly say:

(A) 'Panna was the prince's धाया' (using 'nurse' correctly)

(B) 'Panna showed great धाया on the battlefield' (using 'nurse' where 'courage' is meant)

(C) 'Panna's धैर्य never wavered' (using 'courage' correctly)

(D) 'Panna nursed the prince' (an English paraphrase of धाया)

10. The pair धाया / धैर्य illustrates a Sanskrit principle. Which statement captures it correctly?

- (A) Changing a vowel (here आ → ऐ) can change the whole meaning of a word
- (B) Long and short vowels are interchangeable in Sanskrit
- (C) Two words with the same consonants must mean the same thing
- (D) Vowel quality is only decorative and never affects meaning

11. A प्रसूता (birth-mother) and a धाया can both care for a child. What did the chapter make Panna specifically?

- (A) The प्रसूता (birth-mother), not the धाया
- (B) Both the प्रसूता and the धाया of the prince
- (C) The धाया (foster-mother / nurse), not the प्रसूता
- (D) Neither — she was the prince's tutor

12. Which sentence best shows that धाया denotes a ROLE rather than a personal name?

- (A) 'धाया was born in Mewar' — धाया is her given name
- (B) 'They called the prince धाया' — the prince is the nurse
- (C) 'धाया means a kingdom' — it names a place
- (D) 'Panna was the धाया of Udai Singh' — धाया is the job she held

13. If someone praises the rival's 'धैर्य' in carrying out the plot, why is the word-choice ironic or wrong?

- (A) धैर्य means wet-nurse, so it cannot describe a rival at all
- (B) धैर्य means a bedroom, so it cannot describe a person
- (C) धैर्य means deception, so it praises his treachery accurately
- (D) धैर्य means courage/patience — a virtue — which a treacherous murder plot does not deserve

14. The rival is called दुष्टबुद्धि. Reading the compound as दुष्ट + बुद्धि ('wicked' + 'intellect'), what kind of person is described?

- (A) Someone with no intelligence — simply stupid
- (B) Someone whose intelligence is bent to evil ends — clever but morally corrupt
- (C) Someone of great virtue and wisdom
- (D) Someone brave and loyal to the prince

15. Distinguishing दुष्ट (wicked) from मूर्ख (foolish), how should we judge the rival who designed the कुतन्त्रम्?

- (A) He failed only because he was too foolish to plan
- (B) He was both wise and good-hearted
- (C) He was capable enough to plan a scheme, so his fault was moral wickedness, not stupidity
- (D) He had no plan at all and acted at random

16. छलेन means 'by deception'. The instrumental ending (-ेन) tells us deception was the rival's:

- (A) means / instrument of attack — he attacked BY trickery
- (B) destination — he went TO deception (C) possessor — deception belonged TO him
- (D) location — he hid IN deception

17. The rival chose छल (deception) over an open challenge. What does this choice reveal about him beyond mere wickedness?

- (A) He was honourable and gave fair warning (B) He was generous and offered gifts first
- (C) He was loyal and sought the prince's safety
- (D) He was a coward who would not fight openly and relied on a hidden assassin

18. कुतन्त्रम् splits as कु + तन्त्रम्. Given that the prefix कु- means 'bad', what is the literal force of the word, and why does it fit the story?

- (A) 'A great plan' — fitting because it was large-scale
- (B) 'A bad / wicked plan' — fitting because the plan was to murder the prince
- (C) 'A new plan' — fitting because no one had tried it
- (D) 'A royal plan' — fitting because a prince was involved

19. The assassin came मारयितुम्. A reader concludes 'so the prince was killed.' Why is this conclusion unjustified?

- (A) मारयितुम् is past tense, so the killing definitely happened
- (B) मारयितुम् states only the assassin's PURPOSE ('to kill'); it does not assert the killing succeeded
- (C) मारयितुम् means 'he protected', so no one was harmed
- (D) मारयितुम् names the prince, not any action

20. If the assassin had succeeded against the intended target, who would have died — and who actually died instead?

- (A) Panna was the target, and Panna herself died
- (B) The rival was the target, and the rival died
- (C) The prince was the intended target, but Panna's own son died in his place
- (D) No one was targeted and no one died

21. The assassin 'killed the boy in the bed, thinking he was the prince.' What single fact made the deception work?

- (A) The assassin knew the truth but spared the prince anyway
- (B) The prince had secretly fled the kingdom beforehand
- (C) The assassin could not tell Panna's son from the prince and trusted the bed's occupant was the prince
- (D) Panna told the assassin which child was the prince

22. Suppose the rival's plan had been merely to FRIGHTEN the prince, not to kill him. Which word in the text rules that reading out?

- (A) धाया — the wet-nurse role implies fright
- (B) मारयितुम् ('to kill') — the stated purpose was killing, not frightening
- (C) शयनागारम् — a bedroom implies fright (D) षोडशम् — the date implies fright

23. Panna placed her own son in the prince's शयनागारम्. The choice of THIS location was tactically essential because:

- (A) a bedroom is where soldiers gather, so the son would be defended
- (B) the assassin expected to find the prince asleep there, so a substitute in that exact bed would be mistaken for him
- (C) the bedroom was outside the palace, so the assassin could not reach it
- (D) the bedroom was a throne-room, so the son would be crowned

24. Which statement about the OUTCOME for the three children-or-persons is wholly correct?

- (A) The prince died, Panna's son lived, and Panna died
- (B) The prince lived, Panna's son lived, and Panna died
- (C) The prince died, Panna's son died, and Panna lived
- (D) The prince lived, Panna's son died, and Panna herself lived

25. A classmate says, 'Panna sacrificed HERSELF for the prince.' What is the precise correction?

- (A) The statement is exactly right; Panna died for the prince
- (B) Panna sacrificed the assassin, not herself
- (C) Panna sacrificed the prince to save her son
- (D) Panna sacrificed her own SON's life; she herself survived

26. Why is Panna's sacrifice often called UNIQUE among acts of bravery?

- (A) She risked only her own life, as any soldier does
- (B) She gave up a sum of money, which few would do
- (C) She gave up her OWN child's life to save SOMEONE ELSE'S child — a sacrifice harder than risking only oneself
- (D) She gave up a single day of her work as nurse

27. सर्वस्वत्याग is सर्वस्व + त्याग. Given सर्वस्वम् is glossed स्वीयं सम्पूर्णम् ('one's complete own'), the compound means:

- (A) the gaining of everything one wants
- (B) the giving-up (त्याग) of all that one has — total renunciation
- (C) the giving of a small token gift
- (D) the keeping of one's wealth safely

28. For Panna, what concretely was the सर्वस्व ('one's everything') that she gave up?

- (A) A chest of gold coins from the palace
- (B) Her position and salary as the royal nurse
- (C) Her own son's life — for a mother, the dearest of all she possessed
- (D) A single golden letter from a manuscript

- 29. Which of these would NOT count as सर्वस्वत्याग in the sense the chapter uses?
- (A) A mother giving her only child's life for another
 - (B) A person surrendering everything they own
 - (C) Panna letting her son die to save the prince
 - (D) Donating one small coin while keeping all one's wealth
- 30. A student writes: 'त्याग means receiving a reward.' Using सर्वस्वत्याग, explain the error.
- (A) त्याग does mean reward, so the student is correct
 - (B) त्याग means a battle, so the student is close
 - (C) त्याग means a palace, so the student is partly right
 - (D) त्याग means giving up / renouncing, not receiving — Panna gave up her everything, she did not receive it
- 31. Compared with a soldier who dies in battle, Panna's sacrifice differs chiefly in that:
- (A) she used a weapon while the soldier did not
 - (B) she sacrificed another life dearest to her (her child) rather than only her own
 - (C) she was paid while the soldier was not
 - (D) she fought an army while the soldier fought one man
- 32. Why does the chapter treat Panna's act as proof of loyalty (भक्ति/निष्ठा) and not just love for the prince?
- (A) She expected to be crowned queen in return
 - (B) She acted only because she was forced by the king
 - (C) She honoured her duty as धाया to protect the royal child even at the cost of her own son
 - (D) She disliked her own son and was glad to lose him
- 33. Putting the sacrifice in one sentence, which is most accurate?
- (A) To keep the prince safe, Panna let her own son be killed in the prince's bed, and she survived to mourn him
 - (B) To keep her son safe, Panna let the prince be killed in her son's bed
 - (C) To save herself, Panna let both boys be killed by the assassin
 - (D) To win a reward, Panna let the assassin kill the rival
- 34. स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः breaks into स्वर्णिम + अक्षरैः ('golden' + 'letters', instrumental plural). The phrase 'written in golden letters' is an idiom meaning the person is:
- (A) remembered with the highest honour, forever
 - (B) written about in a secret, hidden book
 - (C) quickly forgotten by everyone
 - (D) recorded only for tax purposes
- 35. The ending -ैः in अक्षरैः is instrumental plural. What does it contribute to 'स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः'?
- (A) 'To the golden letters' — a recipient
 - (B) 'Of the golden letters' — possession
 - (C) 'By means of / with golden letters' — the letters are the instrument of the writing

(D) 'In one golden letter' — singular location

36. Panna's name is honoured वीराङ्गनासु ('among heroic women', locative plural). What does the case-ending here express?

- (A) 'By' heroic women — they did the honouring
- (B) 'Of' heroic women — she owns them
- (C) 'Among / in the group of' heroic women — she ranks within that company
- (D) 'To' heroic women — she was given to them

37. Why is स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः a fitting tribute specifically for someone like Panna?

- (A) Her selfless, supreme sacrifice deserves the most lasting and glorious form of remembrance
- (B) She literally wrote her own story using gold ink
- (C) She traded in gold and so is linked to golden letters
- (D) She was a goldsmith who made golden letters

38. वीराङ्गना is वीर + अङ्गना. Knowing अङ्गना means 'woman', what does the compound precisely denote, and why does it fit Panna better than वीरः alone?

- (A) 'A heroic place'; it fits because Mewar was brave
- (B) 'A woman's weapon'; it fits because she fought
- (C) 'A brave king'; it fits because she ruled
- (D) 'A heroic woman'; वीरः alone means a hero (commonly male), while वीराङ्गना marks her specifically as a brave WOMAN

39. If a writer called Panna a वीराङ्गना and ALSO a कुतन्त्रकारिणी, what would be inconsistent?

- (A) Calling her both a woman and a nurse — these contradict
- (B) Calling her both brave and loyal — these contradict
- (C) Calling her both a heroine and a maker of wicked plots — these moral labels contradict each other
- (D) Calling her both heroic and honoured — these contradict

40. मारयितुम्, अमारयत्, मारयिष्यति and मारयतु all come from the root मारि ('cause to die / kill'). Which one is the INFINITIVE used for the assassin's purpose?

- (A) अमारयत् — 'he killed'
- (B) मारयिष्यति — 'he will kill'
- (C) मारयितुम् — the -तुम् form, 'to kill'
- (D) मारयतु — 'let him kill'

41. Which English gloss correctly pairs with मारयिष्यति?

- (A) 'To kill' — infinitive
- (B) 'He killed' — past tense
- (C) 'Let him kill' — imperative
- (D) 'He will kill' — future tense

42. A line reads: 'सः बालकं ____ आगच्छत्' ('he came ____ the boy'), meaning he came TO KILL the boy. Which form fills the blank?

- (A) अमारयत्
- (B) मारयिष्यति
- (C) मारयतु
- (D) मारयितुम्

- 43. The -तुम् ending generally attaches to a verb root to express purpose. Which of these is therefore also an infinitive?
- (A) रक्षितुम् ('to protect') (B) अरक्षत् ('he protected')
(C) रक्षति ('he protects') (D) रक्षतु ('let him protect')
- 44. Why can the single word मारयितुम् NOT tell us whether the killing actually happened?
- (A) Because मारयितुम् is plural and so refers to many killings
(B) Because मारयितुम् is past and so it always happened
(C) An infinitive only names the action 'to kill' as a purpose; only a tensed verb could report success or failure
(D) Because मारयितुम् is a noun naming the assassin
- 45. Match correctly: which option pairs a form with its RIGHT grammatical label?
- (A) मारयितुम् = past tense (B) अमारयत् = past tense ('he killed')
(C) मारयतु = future tense (D) मारयिष्यति = infinitive
- 46. In the sentence 'दुष्टबुद्धिः बालकं मारयितुम् ऐच्छत्' ('the evil-minded one wished to kill the boy'), the word मारयितुम् depends on which main verb's meaning?
- (A) ऐच्छत् ('wished') — the infinitive completes 'wished to kill'
(B) दुष्टबुद्धिः — the subject 'evil-minded one' (C) बालकम् — the object 'boy'
(D) it stands alone with no link
- 47. A student translates मारयतु as 'to kill'. Correct the error and name the right form for 'to kill'.
- (A) मारयतु already means 'to kill', so it is correct (B) 'To kill' is अमारयत्
(C) 'To kill' is मारयिष्यति
(D) मारयतु is imperative ('let him kill'); the form for 'to kill' is मारयितुम्
- 48. The cardinal number 'sixteen' is षोडश, while षोडशम् is the ordinal 'sixteenth'. Which phrase therefore correctly says 'in the sixteenth century'?
- (A) षोडशे शतके (using the ordinal, in the locative)
(B) षोडश शतानि ('sixteen centuries') (C) षोडश शतके ('sixteen, century')
(D) षष्ठे शतके ('in the sixth century')
- 49. A student writes 'the events were in the षष्ठे century'. Why is this wrong, and what is the right ordinal?
- (A) षष्ठे already means 'sixteenth', so it is correct
(B) The right ordinal is षोडश (the cardinal 'sixteen')
(C) षष्ठे means 'sixth'; the text says षोडशे ('sixteenth'), so the right word is षोडशे
(D) The right ordinal is षष्टिः ('sixty')
- 50. If a tale were set 'षष्ठे शतके' rather than 'षोडशे शतके', how many centuries earlier would that place it?

- (A) One century earlier (15th vs 16th) (B) Ten centuries earlier (6th vs 16th)
(C) Sixty centuries earlier (D) Six centuries later

51. Which set correctly matches each number word to its meaning: षोडश, षोडशम्, षष्ठम्, षष्टिः?

- (A) षोडश = sixth, षोडशम् = sixty, षष्ठम् = sixteen, षष्टिः = sixteenth
(B) षोडश = sixteenth, षोडशम् = sixteen, षष्ठम् = sixty, षष्टिः = sixth
(C) षोडश = sixty, षोडशम् = sixth, षष्ठम् = sixteenth, षष्टिः = sixteen
(D) षोडश = sixteen (cardinal), षोडशम् = sixteenth, षष्ठम् = sixth, षष्टिः = sixty

52. राजगृह and राजपुत्र both begin with राज- ('royal/king'). One is a PLACE and one a PERSON. Which pairing is right?

- (A) राजगृह = the royal palace (place); राजपुत्र = the prince (person)
(B) राजगृह = the prince (person); राजपुत्र = the palace (place)
(C) both are places (palaces) (D) both are persons (princes)

53. The assassin entered the राजपुत्रस्य शयनागारम् within the राजगृहम्. Which reading is correct?

- (A) He entered a prince that was inside a bedroom
(B) He entered a palace that was inside the prince
(C) He entered a prison inside a bedroom
(D) He entered the prince's bedroom, located inside the royal palace

54. शयनागारम् is शयन + आगारम् ('sleeping' + 'room/abode'). Given this, which Sanskrit word would best name a 'prison' by contrast?

- (A) कारागारम् (a confinement-room) — same -आगारम् element, different first part
(B) राजपुत्रम् (a prince) (C) षोडशम् (sixteenth)
(D) धाया (a wet-nurse)

55. Why is it an error to translate 'राजगृहम् अगच्छत्' as 'he went to the prince'?

- (A) Because राजगृहम् means 'he went' already, so no destination is needed
(B) राजगृहम् is the palace (a place); 'the prince' would be राजपुत्रम् — so it should be 'he went to the palace'
(C) Because राजगृहम् means 'prince', so the translation is right
(D) Because अगच्छत् means 'palace', not 'went'

56. Choose the option in which BOTH meaning-pairings are correct.

- (A) धाया = 'a prince' AND कुतन्त्रम् = 'a good plan'
(B) राजगृह = 'a bedroom' AND षोडशम् = 'sixteen' (cardinal)
(C) मारयितुम् = 'to kill' (infinitive) AND सर्वस्वम् = 'one's everything'
(D) छलेन = 'by truth' AND दुष्ट = 'foolish'

57. Choose the option in which BOTH grammar/case judgements are correct.

- (A) मारयितुम् is past tense AND अमारयत् is an infinitive
(B) छलेन is instrumental ('by deception') AND षोडशे शतके is locative ('in the sixteenth century')

- (C) स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः is nominative singular AND षोडश is an ordinal
(D) वीराङ्गनासु is instrumental ('by heroines') AND मारयतु is future

58. A full-sentence summary must be both historically and grammatically accurate. Which is correct on BOTH counts?

- (A) In the sixth century, Panna herself was killed because the assassin अमारयत् the prince
(B) In the sixteenth century, the धाया Panna let her own son be killed मारयितुम् (the assassin's purpose) so the prince might live
(C) In the sixteenth century, Panna the queen killed the assassin, whose purpose was मारयितुम् her son
(D) In the sixteenth century, Panna gave up her wealth, and मारयितुम् means 'he killed'

59. Why does the chapter end by honouring Panna स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः rather than recording only the assassin's deed?

- (A) History chooses to immortalise the heroine's selfless sacrifice, not the villain's treachery
(B) Because the assassin was the real hero of the story
(C) Because Panna paid the assassin in golden letters
(D) Because golden letters were the assassin's reward

60. Pull it all together: which single statement is fully consistent with the chapter's facts AND grammar?

- (A) A दुष्टबुद्धि (wicked, not merely foolish) rival sent an assassin मारयितुम् the prince; Panna's सर्वस्वत्याग — her son's life — saved the future king, and she is honoured स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः
(B) A मूर्ख (foolish) rival sent an assassin who अमारयत् the prince, and Panna died with him
(C) A दुष्टबुद्धि rival came मारयितुम् (he killed) the wet-nurse, and the prince made the sacrifice
(D) A wise rival honestly challenged Panna, and her wealth-त्याग saved her own son

Worked Solutions

1. (A) Panna was indeed a heroic woman (वीराङ्गना), a wet-nurse (धाय), and lived in the षोडशे शतके (16th century) — those three hold. The single false claim is that she was the prince's birth-mother: she was his foster-mother / nurse, not his mother. So exactly three of the four are correct. Counting all four ignores the birth-mother error; counting only one or two undercounts the true statements.

2. (C) Udai Singh II belongs to the Maharana lineage of Mewar, and the events are placed in the षोडशे शतके, i.e. the 1500s. The Maurya (3rd c. BCE), Gupta (4th c. CE) and a 17th-century Mughal framing all misplace the century given in the text as the sixteenth.

3. (D) Though she served as the prince's धाय, the chapter's whole point is that her act of supreme sacrifice raises her to a वीराङ्गना (heroine) honoured in history. 'Servant' captures the job but not the heroism. She was not the queen, not an army commander, and she certainly did work in the palace.

4. (A) A historical account is grounded in real people, places and time — here Udai Singh, Mewar and the 16th century. Talking animals point to a fable, a step-by-step process to a science lesson, and an undated imaginary land to fiction — none of which fit this chapter.

5. (B) Panna saved the prince Udai Singh, who lived and later ruled because Panna's son was killed in his place. Panna's own son died and so could not become king; the assassin was the killer; the question asks who became king through her act, which is the rescued prince.

6. (B) The wicked rival first forms the evil plot (R); learning of it, Panna substitutes her own son (Q); then the assassin strikes the boy in the bed (P); and finally history honours Panna in golden letters (S). Putting the swap before the plot (Q first), or the strike before the swap (P before Q), or the honour first (S first) all break the cause-and-effect chain.

7. (D) The सप्तमी (locative) typically means 'in/at/during', so षोडशे शतके = 'in the sixteenth century', fixing when the story happens. 'To' would be the dative (चतुर्थी), 'by/with' the instrumental (तृतीया), and 'of' the genitive (षष्ठी) — none of which matches a locative ending here.

8. (A) धाया = धात्री = a wet-nurse / foster-mother (one who nourishes the child). The 'patience/courage' sense belongs to धैर्य (a different word), a bedroom is शयनागारम्, and a deceptive scheme is कुतन्त्रम् / छल.

9. (B) The confusion appears when धाया (wet-nurse) is used where धैर्य (courage/patience) is intended — 'great धाया on the battlefield' should be धैर्य. The other three sentences each use the right word for the right sense, so they reveal no confusion.

10. (A) धाया and धैर्य share consonants but differ in a vowel, and they mean entirely different things — so vowel changes are meaning-bearing. Treating vowels as interchangeable, assuming identical consonants force identical meaning, or calling vowels merely decorative all contradict this distinction.

11. (C) Panna was the prince's धाया, his foster-mother / wet-nurse, while his birth-mother (प्रसूता) was someone else. She was not his birth-mother, not both, and not a tutor; this distinction is why placing her own son in the bed was such a personal sacrifice.

12. (D) धाया is a common noun for the role 'wet-nurse'; 'Panna was the धाया of Udai Singh' uses it as a role-title. Treating धाया as a personal name, applying it to the prince, or reading it as a place all misuse the word.

13. (D) धैर्य names a virtue (courage/patience); applying it to a cowardly, deceitful plot misuses a praise-word. धैर्य does not mean wet-nurse (that is धाया), nor a bedroom (शयनागारम्), nor deception (छल) — so only the 'virtue misapplied' reading is right.

14. (B) दुष्ट ('wicked') + बुद्धि ('intellect') = an intellect turned to evil, i.e. cunning but corrupt. It does NOT mean 'no intelligence' (that would be मूर्ख / a stupidity word), nor virtuous wisdom, nor bravery and loyalty.

15. (C) Designing a कुतन्त्रम् shows planning ability, so the flaw is moral (दुष्ट), not intellectual (मूर्ख). He was not merely foolish, not good-hearted, and certainly not plan-less — the plot itself was deliberate.

16. (A) The instrumental case (तृतीया, ending -ेन here) expresses the means: छलेन = 'by/through deception', the method of attack. It is not a destination (dative), a possessor (genitive) or a place (locative).

17. (D) Preferring deception to an open, honest challenge marks cowardice — he used a hidden assassin rather than fight fairly. The honourable, generous and loyal readings all contradict a plot to murder a sleeping child by trickery.

18. (B) कु- ('bad') + तन्त्रम् ('plan/device') = a wicked scheme, apt for a murder plot. कु- does not mean 'great', 'new' or 'royal'; the prefix's job here is precisely to brand the plan as evil.

19. (B) The infinitive मारयितुम् ('to kill') gives the intention behind coming, not an accomplished fact — and in the story the prince was NOT killed (the substituted boy was). It is not past tense (that is अमारयत्), does not mean 'protected', and is not a name.

20. (C) The plot aimed at the prince; Panna's substitution meant her own son lay in the bed and was killed instead. Panna survived (she was not the target), the rival was the schemer (not a victim), and a death certainly occurred — so only the prince-targeted, son-died reading is correct.

21. (C) The trick succeeded because the assassin assumed whoever lay in the prince's bed was the prince — he could not distinguish the two boys. He did not know the truth, the prince had not fled (he was hidden/safe within the plan), and Panna would never have revealed the prince.

22. (B) The purpose-word मारयितुम् ('to kill') fixes the deadly intent, ruling out a mere scare. धाया (nurse), शयनागारम् (bedroom) and षोडशम् (sixteenth) carry no information about the rival's intent at all.

23. (B) Because the killer expected the sleeping prince in his own bedroom, substituting the son in that very bed guaranteed the mistaken-identity killing. A bedroom is not a barracks, not outside the palace, and not a throne-room — those readings misunderstand both the word and the tactic.

24. (D) The chapter's core fact: the prince was saved (lived), the substituted son was killed (died), and Panna survived. Any version that kills the prince, spares the son, or kills Panna mis-states the central tragedy and triumph of the story.

25. (D) The famous, painful fact is that Panna gave up her son, not her own life — she lived on. She did not 'sacrifice the assassin' (a villain, not a sacrifice), and she certainly did not save her son by giving up the prince — that reverses the whole story.

26. (C) Most heroes risk their own lives; Panna's rarer, harder choice was to let her own son die so another woman's child (the prince) might live. Risking only oneself, giving up money, or losing a day's work all fall far short of that uniqueness.

27. (B) त्याग = giving up / renunciation, and सर्वस्व = one's everything, so सर्वस्वत्याग = surrendering all one has. It is the opposite of gaining; it is far more than a token gift; and it is the opposite of keeping wealth safe.

28. (C) सर्वस्वम् means one's complete own; for a mother the dearest 'everything' is her child, and Panna gave her son's life. It was not gold, not merely her job, and certainly not a 'golden letter' (which belongs to the स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः idiom, not to what she surrendered).

29. (D) सर्वस्वत्याग means giving up ALL one has; donating one coin while keeping everything is the very opposite. Giving an only child, surrendering everything, and Panna's act each are total sacrifices that do fit the term.

30. (D) त्याग is renunciation; सर्वस्वत्याग is renouncing one's all, the exact opposite of receiving a reward. It does not mean reward, battle, or palace — Panna's act was a loss freely given, not a gain.

31. (B) Both are heroic, but the distinctive feature of Panna's सर्वस्वत्याग is that what she gave was her own child's life, not just her own. The weapon, payment, and army-versus-man contrasts are irrelevant to why her sacrifice is singled out.

32. (C) Her fidelity to the trust placed in a धाया — guarding the prince — drove her to pay the unbearable price of her son's life, which is loyalty of the highest order. She sought no crown, was not coerced, and her grief shows the loss was anything but welcome.

33. (A) The accurate summary: prince saved, son substituted and killed, Panna alive. Swapping the victims (prince killed instead), killing both boys to save herself, or redirecting the assassin onto the rival all distort the events the chapter records.

34. (A) स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः ('in golden letters') idiomatically marks lasting, glorious remembrance. It is not about secrecy, forgetting, or bureaucratic records — the gold stands for honour that endures.

35. (C) Instrumental plural -ः gives 'by/with [many] golden letters', so the name is written WITH golden letters. It is not a dative ('to'), genitive ('of'), or a singular locative ('in one letter') — the plural instrumental is the key.

36. (C) The locative plural -सु means 'among/in', placing Panna within the ranks of वीराङ्गनाः (heroic women). 'By' would be instrumental, 'of' genitive, and 'to' dative — the locative simply situates her in that honoured set.

37. (A) The idiom fits because her sacrifice merits undying honour — 'golden letters' is figurative for glory, not literal gold work. She did not write with gold ink, trade in gold, or work as a goldsmith; reading it literally misses the metaphor.

38. (D) वीर ('brave/hero') + अङ्गना ('woman') = a brave woman, the exact honour for Panna. It is not a place, not a weapon, and not a king (she did not rule); the feminine अङ्गना is what makes वीराङ्गना the right word over a generic वीरः.

39. (C) वीराङ्गना praises her as a heroine, while कुतन्त्रकारिणी ('maker of an evil plot') would brand her wicked — the two cannot both be true of her. 'Woman + nurse', 'brave + loyal', and 'heroic + honoured' are all compatible pairs, so they create no contradiction.

40. (C) The infinitive (purpose, 'to kill') is मारयितुम्, marked by -तुम्. अमारयत् is past ('he killed'), मारयिष्यति is future ('he will kill'), and मारयतु is imperative ('let him kill') — only the -तुम् form is the infinitive.

41. (D) मारयिष्यति is future ('he will kill'). The infinitive 'to kill' is मारयितुम्, the past 'he killed' is अमारयत्, and the imperative 'let him kill' is मारयतु — each a distinct form.

42. (D) To express purpose ('came to kill'), Sanskrit uses the infinitive मारयितुम् with the verb of coming. The past अमारयत्, future मारयिष्यति, and imperative मारयतु cannot serve as a purpose-infinitive after आगच्छत्.

43. (A) रक्षितुम् carries -तुम् and means 'to protect' — an infinitive like मारयितुम्. अरक्षत् is past, रक्षति present, and रक्षतु imperative; none has the infinitive -तुम् ending.

44. (C) The infinitive states the intended action, not its outcome — you would need a finite past verb (like अमारयत्) to assert it happened. मारयितुम् is not plural, not past (so it does not assert success), and not a noun naming a person.

45. (B) अमारयत् is genuine past tense ('he killed'). मारयितुम् is the infinitive (not past), मारयतु is imperative (not future), and मारयिष्यति is future (not an infinitive) — so only the अमारयत् pairing is correct.

46. (A) An infinitive like मारयितुम् typically completes a verb of wishing/coming/intending — here ऐच्छत् ('wished'), giving 'wished to kill'. It does not depend on the subject (दुष्टबुद्धिः) or the object (बालकम्), and an infinitive of purpose does not stand isolated from a governing verb.

47. (D) मारयतु is an imperative ('let him kill'), not an infinitive; 'to kill' is मारयितुम् (-तुम्). The student is wrong that मारयतु means 'to kill', and 'to kill' is neither अमारयत् (past) nor मारयिष्यति

(future).

48. (A) 'In the sixteenth century' needs the ordinal in the locative: षोडशे शतके. 'षोडश शतानि' counts sixteen centuries (cardinal + plural), 'षोडश शतके' mismatches a cardinal with a locative noun, and षष्ठे शतके means the SIXTH century — not the sixteenth.

49. (C) षष्ठे = 'sixth', a different century from the षोडशे ('sixteenth') the chapter gives. षष्ठे does not mean sixteenth; षोडश is the CARDINAL 'sixteen' (not the ordinal needed); and षष्टिः means 'sixty' — only षोडशे fits 'sixteenth'.

50. (B) षष्ठे शतके is the 6th century and षोडशे शतके the 16th; the difference is $16 - 6 = 10$ centuries earlier. It is not one century (that would be 15th), not sixty (a confusion with षष्टिः 'sixty'), and certainly not 'later'.

51. (D) The correct matches: षोडश = sixteen (cardinal), षोडशम् = sixteenth (ordinal), षष्ठम् = sixth (ordinal), षष्टिः = sixty. The other rows scramble these, e.g. confusing the cardinal/ordinal of sixteen or mixing 'sixth' with 'sixty'.

52. (A) गृह means 'house', so राजगृह = royal house/palace (a place); पुत्र means 'son', so राजपुत्र = king's son = prince (a person). Reversing them, or calling both places or both persons, ignores the meanings of गृह and पुत्र.

53. (D) राजपुत्रस्य शयनागारम् = 'the prince's bedroom', and राजगृहम् = the palace that contains it: a bedroom (place) belonging to the prince (person) within the palace (place). The other readings nonsensically put a place inside a person, or introduce a prison (कारागारम्) not mentioned here.

54. (A) शयनागारम् = sleeping-room; the -आगारम् ('room/abode') element also forms कारागारम् = prison (कारा = confinement). राजपुत्रम् is a person (prince), षोडशम् a number, and धाया a nurse — none is a kind of room.

55. (B) राजगृहम् = the palace, the destination, so the line is 'he went to the palace'; 'the prince' is राजपुत्रम्. राजगृहम् is not a verb, does not mean 'prince', and अगच्छत् ('went') is the verb — confirming the destination is the palace.

56. (C) मारयितुम् ('to kill') and सर्वस्वम् ('one's everything') are both right. The others each contain two errors: धाया is a nurse not a prince and कुतन्त्रम् is an evil plot not a good one; राजगृह is a palace not a bedroom and षोडशम् is the ordinal 'sixteenth' not the cardinal; छलेन is 'by deception' not 'by truth' and दुष्ट is 'wicked' not 'foolish'.

57. (B) छलेन (instrumental, 'by deception') and षोडशे शतके (locative, 'in the 16th century') are both correctly labelled. The others fail: मारयितुम् is infinitive (not past) and अमारयत् is past (not infinitive); स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः is instrumental PLURAL (not nominative singular) and षोडश is a cardinal (not ordinal); वीराङ्गनासु is locative plural 'among heroines' (not instrumental) and मारयतु is imperative (not future).

58. (B) The accurate summary keeps the 16th century, Panna as धाया, her son (not herself) dying, the prince surviving, and मारयितुम् as the assassin's purpose ('to kill'). The wrong options variously mis-date it to the 6th century, kill Panna, make her a queen who kills the assassin, replace son with wealth, or mis-call मारयितुम् a past-tense 'he killed'.

59. (A) The 'golden letters' tribute belongs to Panna because her सर्वस्वत्याग is what deserves eternal honour, while the assassin's treachery is condemned, not celebrated. The assassin is no hero, the gold is a metaphor (not a payment), and the tribute is Panna's, never the assassin's reward.

60. (A) The fully consistent statement: a दुष्टबुद्धि (wicked) rival's assassin came मारयितुम् (purpose: to kill) the prince; Panna's सर्वस्वत्याग (her son's life) saved the future king, and she is honoured in golden letters. The distractors err by calling the rival merely मूर्ख and killing the prince/Panna; by mis-glossing मारयितुम् as past 'he killed' and swapping who sacrificed; or by inventing an honest challenge and reducing the sacrifice to mere wealth saving her own son.
