Chapter 12: वीराङ्गना पन्नाधाया (Panna Dhai, the Brave)

Paper 5 — (progressively harder)

Subject	Sanskrit (NCERT Class 7, Deepakam)
Chapter	12 — वीराङ्गना पन्नाधाया (Panna Dhai, the Brave)
Total Questions	60 (Multiple Choice, single correct)
Maximum Marks	240
Suggested Time	90 minutes

Marking scheme: +4 for each correct answer · -1 for each wrong answer · 0 if unattempted.

Instructions: Each question has four options (A), (B), (C), (D); exactly one is correct.

Classic P5 traps: the one who died was Panna's own son Chandan (Panna survived, so 'self-sacrifice' is imprecise and her loss is dearer-than-self); मारयितुम् (-तुम्) names only PURPOSE 'to kill', never asserting success or a victim, against अमारयत् (past), मारयिष्यति (future), मारयतु (imperative) and the passive हन्यते; वीराङ्गना = वीर + अङ्गना by savarṇa-dīrgha sandhi (अ+अ→आ), a brave WOMAN not a place/weapon/queen; षोडश is the cardinal but षोडशे शतके is the ordinal-LOCATIVE 'in the sixteenth century' (1501–1600), not षष्ठे / षष्टिः; छलेन / स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः are instrumental, राजपुत्रस्य genitive, शयनागारे / वीराङ्गनासु locative — never nominatives; दुष्ट = morally wicked, मूर्ख = foolish; राजगृह a PLACE vs राजपुत्र a PERSON; सर्वस्वत्याग = giving-up of one's-everything, never a reward received; धाया (foster-nurse, syn. धात्री) vs the homophone धैर्य (courage). Do not write on this paper — mark answers on your answer sheet.

1. A reader notes the title pairs वीर- with -अङ्गना yet describes a woman who never lifted a weapon. The deepest reason the author still earns the valour-word for Panna is that:

- (A) the author only meant she was physically strong enough to fight if needed
- (B) valour is judged by the magnitude of what is risked and surrendered, and her loyal renunciation matched a warrior's, so the word measures moral courage rather than martial role
- (C) वीर- here loses its meaning entirely and merely indicates that she was female
- (D) the title is figurative for her beauty, not her courage at all

2. Suppose the chapter had said Panna placed a wooden likeness of the prince in the bed instead of her son. Which feature of the story's MORAL claim would collapse, while which would survive?

- (A) the supreme cost — a living child's life — would collapse, leaving only cleverness; the prince's rescue would survive, but the act would no longer rank as सर्वस्वत्याग
- (B) nothing would change, because the prince is saved either way and that is the whole point
- (C) the rescue would collapse but the sacrifice would remain, since the doll still counts as her everything
- (D) both the rescue and the sacrifice would survive unchanged, only the assassin's role would differ

3. The chapter calls Panna a धाया, glossed धात्री, and contrasts this with a प्रसूता. A student concludes 'धात्री and प्रसूता are therefore opposites in meaning, like धाया and धैर्य.' The hidden error is:

- (A) there is no error; धात्री, प्रसूता and धैर्य all mean the same as धाया
- (B) the error is that प्रसूता actually means courage, exactly as धैर्य does
- (C) the error is that धात्री means a bedroom, so it cannot gloss धाया
- (D) धात्री is offered as a SYNONYM of धाया (both = foster-nurse), whereas प्रसूता names a different role (birth-giver) and धैर्य is only an accidental sound-alike — synonymy, role-contrast and homophony are three different relations wrongly merged

4. In 'बनवीर: छलेन उदयसिंहं हन्तुम् ऐच्छत्', exactly which grammatical roles do छलेन and हन्तुम् play, and what does combining them tell us?

- (A) छलेन is the nominative subject and हन्तुम् the past finite verb, so the sentence reports that Banbir killed by deception
- (B) छलेन is locative ('in deception') and हन्तुम् an adjective of उदयसिंहम्, describing the prince as deadly
- (C) both छलेन and हन्तुम् are accusative objects of ऐच्छत्, the two things he wished for
- (D) छलेन is instrumental ('by deception', the means) and हन्तुम् is the infinitive of purpose ('to kill') completing ऐच्छत् — together they state only Banbir's wished aim and chosen method, not any accomplished killing

5. Re-rank, from EARLIEST root-cause to final outcome, in a strict enabling chain: (P) Udai Singh occupies his rightful place in Mewar's line; (Q) the assassin slays the child he believes is the prince; (R) Banbir's दुष्टबुद्धि conceives the कुतन्त्रम्; (S) Panna lays her own son in the royal bed.

- (A) $R \rightarrow S \rightarrow Q \rightarrow P$ (B) $R \rightarrow Q \rightarrow S \rightarrow P$
- (C) $S \rightarrow R \rightarrow Q \rightarrow P$ (D) $R \rightarrow S \rightarrow P \rightarrow Q$

6. वीराङ्गना joins वीर + अङ्गना. A pupil argues that because वीर is masculine, the whole word and any adjective agreeing with पन्ना must be masculine. Why is this wrong?

- (A) it is correct: the first member always fixes the gender, so वीराङ्गना is masculine
- (B) in this compound the final, governing member is अङ्गना (a feminine noun), so the whole word is feminine and agrees with feminine पन्ना; the gender of the prior member वीर- does not govern the compound

(C) the word has no gender at all, so neither agreement applies

(D) वीर- is actually feminine here, which is the only reason the word is feminine

7. A debater says: 'Because the assassin truly succeeded in killing, the prince must have died — success and survival cannot both be true.' Resolve the apparent paradox.

(A) there is no paradox: the assassin succeeded against the wrong target (Panna's son in the bed), so a real killing and the prince's survival coexist — the success fell on the decoy, which is exactly what spared the heir

(B) the debater is right; a successful killing logically entails the intended victim's death

(C) the killing never happened at all, so both success and a death are false

(D) the prince did die, and the chapter's claim of survival is simply an inconsistency

8. Compare the two forms in 'सः बालकम् अमारयत्' and 'सः बालकं हन्तुम् आगच्छत्'. Which single statement about their truth-claims is exact?

(A) both assert a completed killing; only the verb of motion differs

(B) the first (अमारयत्, past) asserts the boy WAS killed; the second (हन्तुम्, infinitive of purpose) asserts only that he CAME with the aim to kill — the second leaves the outcome open

(C) the first states only a purpose and the second a completed killing — the reverse of the truth

(D) neither contains any verb of killing; both merely describe arriving

9. The chapter could be retold ending: 'and so Panna's name was written in golden letters.' Why does स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः being INSTRUMENTAL, not nominative, matter for what the sentence asserts?

(A) it makes no difference; instrumental and nominative would assert the same thing here

(B) as instrumental it means the golden letters are the subject who remember her

(C) as instrumental it means her name was recorded BY MEANS OF golden letters — the letters are the honouring tool and her name the thing honoured; a nominative reading would wrongly make the golden letters themselves the subject being remembered

(D) as instrumental it means her name was given TO the golden letters as a gift

10. A moral-philosophy seminar asks whether Panna's act loses worth because she felt bound by duty as a धाय्या. The reasoning truest to the chapter is:

(A) duty does not cancel sacrifice; it is precisely because her duty demanded the costliest loss — her own child — and she met rather than evaded it that the act is honoured

(B) it loses all worth, because an act done from duty by definition costs the doer nothing

(C) it loses worth only if she was paid wages, which a धाय्या always is

(D) it gains worth only if she had no duty at all and acted on a whim

11. Identify the agent (कर्ता) and patient (कर्म) in each clause of 'बनवीरः कुतन्त्रम् अरचयत्, पन्ना स्वपुत्रं न्यवेशयत्, हन्ता बालकम् अहन्' — in order:

- (A) (1) agent Banbir / patient the evil plot; (2) agent Panna / patient her own son; (3) agent the assassin / patient the boy
- (B) (1) agent the plot / patient Banbir; (2) agent the son / patient Panna; (3) agent the boy / patient the assassin
- (C) all three clauses share Banbir as the agent
- (D) (1) agent Panna / patient Banbir; (2) agent the assassin / patient the son; (3) agent the prince / patient the boy

12. Why does making Panna the प्रसूता of Udai Singh (a counterfactual) actually WEAKEN the chapter's moral claim relative to her being his धाया?

- (A) it would strengthen the claim, since a real mother's love is the highest motive possible
- (B) it would change nothing, since she sacrifices a child to save a child in both versions
- (C) as his birth-mother she would have a natural maternal pull toward him, so saving him might flow from instinct; as a mere foster-nurse with no blood tie, choosing his life over her own son's reveals chosen loyalty, which is morally weightier
- (D) it would weaken it because a birth-mother is legally forbidden to make such a choice

13. A student writes the date as 'षष्ठितमे शतके'. Two faults hide here. Which option names both correctly?

- (A) षष्ठितम means 'sixtieth' not 'sixteenth' (the text's number is षोडश), and even the intended century is the sixteenth (1501–1600), so both the number-word and the value are wrong
- (B) only the case is wrong; षष्ठितम does mean 'sixteenth'
- (C) षष्ठितम correctly means 'sixteenth'; the only fault is that शतके should be nominative शतकम्
- (D) there is no fault; षष्ठितमे शतके faithfully renders 'in the sixteenth century'

14. The chapter frames Panna's SURVIVAL as central, not incidental. Which consequence of her living best explains why?

- (A) by living she proved she had risked nothing, lessening the deed
- (B) by living she bore the lasting grief of her child's death, so her sacrifice was a continuing burden carried for loyalty's sake rather than a single fatal instant
- (C) by living she could later be crowned, which is the reward the chapter celebrates
- (D) her survival shows the assassin spared her, proving the whole plot failed

15. In 'राजपुत्रस्य कृते पन्नायाः पुत्रः प्राणान् अत्यजत्', what do राजपुत्रस्य कृते and the verb अत्यजत् jointly convey?

- (A) 'by the prince, Panna's son was given life' — राजपुत्रस्य कृते marks agency and अत्यजत् means 'received'
- (B) 'in the prince, the son will abandon his life' — कृते is locative and अत्यजत् is future tense
- (C) 'for the sake of the prince, Panna's son gave up his life' — कृते with the genitive marks benefit (for whose sake), and अत्यजत् (past of त्यज्) reports the giving-up as accomplished
- (D) 'the prince's son gave up his life' — राजपुत्रस्य modifies पुत्रः, making the dead boy the prince's child

16. If we swap मारयितुम् for रक्षितुम् in 'सः बालकं ____ आगच्छत्', what does the substitution prove about the -तुम् class of forms?

- (A) it proves रक्षितुम् is past tense while मारयितुम् is future
- (B) it proves the sentence becomes ungrammatical, since रक्षितुम् cannot take -तुम्
- (C) both are infinitives of purpose occupying the same slot, so only the AIM (to kill vs to protect) changes while the grammar — a purpose-infinitive on the verb of motion — stays identical, isolating meaning from morphology
- (D) it proves -तुम् turns the verb into the subject of the sentence

17. Map the four figures by what each one INTENDS versus what each one RECEIVES in outcome. Which row is wholly accurate?

- (A) Banbir intends the throne and lawfully receives it; Panna intends a reward and receives wealth; Udai Singh receives death; Chandan survives
- (B) Panna intends to kill the assassin and succeeds; Banbir intends to protect the prince; Udai Singh and Chandan both rule jointly
- (C) Banbir intends the heir's death but receives his scheme's defeat; Panna intends to save the prince and receives it at her son's cost; Udai Singh intends nothing yet receives his life and throne; Chandan, intending nothing, loses his life
- (D) all four intend the prince's survival and all four receive it equally

18. A line reads 'पन्ना न शत्रुणा अयुध्यत, अपितु छलं न्यवारयत्'. Why is 'redirected the blow' a better gloss for her method than 'fought off the assassin'?

- (A) because she drew a sword and defeated the assassin in single combat
- (B) because she bribed the assassin to spare the prince and leave
- (C) because she locked the prince inside the treasury and barred the door
- (D) the sentence denies combat (न अयुध्यत) and affirms she countered the trickery itself — she did not battle the killer but ensured the wrong child lay in the bed, turning a stratagem against its author

19. Which single sentence is faithful on EVERY count — date, role, grammar label, the identity of the one who died, and the honour?

- (A) In षष्ठे शतके (locative, 'in the sixth century'), Panna herself was killed मारयितुम् (past, 'he killed') and the prince made the sacrifice
- (B) In षोडशे शतके (instrumental, 'by the sixteenth century'), Panna the queen slew the assassin and her son Chandan was crowned
- (C) In the sixteenth century, the foolish (मूर्ख) Banbir honestly challenged Panna, whose wealth-त्याग saved her son, and the assassin is honoured स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः
- (D) In षोडशे शतके (locative, 'in the sixteenth century'), the loyal धाया Panna let her own son be killed — the assassin having come हन्तुम् (infinitive, 'to kill') the prince — so the heir Uday Singh lived, and she is honoured स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः (instrumental, 'in golden letters')

20. Banbir's vice and Panna's virtue are layered. Arrange from the rival's enabling vice to Panna's culminating virtue: (P) छल, (Q) कुतन्त्रम्, (R) निष्ठा, (S) सर्वस्वत्याग.

- (A) सर्वस्वत्याग and छल belong to Banbir; निष्ठा and कुतन्त्रम् belong to Panna
- (B) all four describe Panna, and Banbir is assigned no named vice
- (C) Banbir's छल (deceit) furnishes his कुतन्त्रम् (evil scheme); opposing them, Panna's निष्ठा (loyalty) issues in her सर्वस्वत्याग (total renunciation) — vice (P→Q) answered by virtue (R→S)
- (D) निष्ठा produces the कुतन्त्रम्, and छल produces the सर्वस्वत्याग

21. षोडशे शतके is converted as '1501–1600 CE'. A peer objects 'the sixteenth century should be the 1600s.' What corrects the peer?

- (A) the peer is right: the sixteenth century is exactly the year 1600
- (B) an ordinal century N spans the years (N–1)·100+1 to N·100, so the sixteenth century runs 1501–1600 (the 1500s); the peer wrongly equates 'sixteenth' with the round number 1600
- (C) the sixteenth century means the years 16 to 100, so neither answer is right
- (D) the conversion to 1501–1600 confuses षोडशे with षष्ठे and is itself the error

22. Recast 'बनवीरः बालकं हन्तुम् ऐच्छत्' into a faithful passive-sense paraphrase keeping who-intends-to-kill-whom.

- (A) 'बनवीरेण बालकः हन्तुम् इष्टः' — the agent Banbir becomes instrumental (बनवीरेण) and the boy the grammatical patient, preserving that Banbir wished the boy killed
- (B) 'बालकः बनवीरम् अहन्' — 'the boy killed Banbir'
- (C) 'बालकः हन्तुम् ऐच्छत्' — 'the boy wished to kill'
- (D) 'बनवीरः राजा अभवत्' — 'Banbir became king'

23. Why does the chapter's genre as ऐतिहासिक (historical), not कथा (fable), change how the reader treats उदयसिंह, मेवाड and षोडशे शतके?

- (A) a historical account stakes a claim to real referents, so the ruler, kingdom and century are to be taken as actual and checkable facts, not invented decoration as in a fable
- (B) it makes no difference, since both genres invent their names and dates freely

- (C) it means the reader must reject the moral lesson as unimportant in history
(D) it means every proper name should be distrusted as certainly fictional

24. Given शयनागारम् = शयन ('sleeping') + आगारम् ('room/store'), which coinage would most plausibly mean 'a dining-hall', and why?

- (A) षोडशागारम्, built on षोडश ('sixteen') (B) राजपुत्रागारम्, built on 'prince'
(C) भोजनागारम् — joining भोजन ('eating/food') to the same productive -आगारम् ('room'), parallel to शयन + आगार for a sleeping-room
(D) हन्तुमागारम्, built on the infinitive 'to kill'

25. A pupil claims दुष्टबुद्धि and मूर्ख are interchangeable insults for Banbir. Using how the कुतन्त्रम् is described, refute this precisely.

- (A) his plot was carefully designed and nearly succeeded, which shows intellectual capacity, not stupidity; so दुष्टबुद्धि (a mind bent to evil) fits, while मूर्ख (lacking intellect) would falsely excuse the wickedness as mere dullness
(B) they are interchangeable, since both simply mean 'enemy'
(C) मूर्ख is the better word, because only a fool would attempt such a plot
(D) दुष्टबुद्धि means 'foolish-minded', so the two are exact synonyms after all

26. Parse the agreement in 'धायी पन्ना सर्वैः वीराङ्गनासु पूज्यते' ('the nurse Panna is honoured by all among the heroines'). Which fact is correct?

- (A) सर्वैः is the nominative subject and पन्ना its object, so 'all honour Panna' actively
(B) पूज्यते is past tense, so the honouring is finished and over
(C) वीराङ्गनासु is instrumental 'by the heroines', who are the ones doing the honouring
(D) पूज्यते is passive present ('is honoured'), सर्वैः is instrumental plural marking the agent 'by all', and वीराङ्गनासु is locative plural 'among the heroines' — so the honouring is ongoing and Panna is ranked within that company

27. A reader proposes the assassin is the true protagonist because 'without his act there is no rescue.' Why does the chapter's value-scheme reject this?

- (A) because the assassin was secretly loyal to the prince the whole time
(B) because it was the assassin, not Panna, who made the सर्वस्वत्याग
(C) because heroism in Sanskrit means simply being the cause of what happens
(D) being causally necessary to events confers no praise; the chapter ranks heroism by moral worth, and the assassin is a tool of the wicked plot, so his indispensability to the plot does not make him admirable

28. Which sentence commits a place-versus-person error involving राजगृह and राजपुत्र?

- (A) 'हन्ता राजगृहं प्राविशत्' — 'the assassin entered the palace'
(B) 'राजगृहः निद्रां अकरोत्' — 'the palace slept', attributing a person's action (sleeping) to a place; only the राजपुत्र could sleep
(C) 'राजपुत्रः शयनागारे अस्वपत्' — 'the prince slept in the bedroom'
(D) 'राजपुत्रः लक्ष्यम् आसीत्' — 'the prince was the target'

29. Why is the assassin's mistaken BELIEF that he killed the prince unable to make the prince the actual victim?

- (A) because in Sanskrit grammar a strong belief literally changes who dies
- (B) because the assassin in fact knew the truth and chose to spare the prince
- (C) the narrative tracks what truly happened, not what the killer believed; reality has Panna's son dead and the prince alive, so a false belief cannot transfer the death onto the spared child
- (D) because the prince really did die and the chapter merely omitted saying so

30. If a translator renders सर्वस्वत्याग as 'donated some of her wealth', what precise nuance is destroyed?

- (A) nothing is destroyed; 'donated some wealth' captures सर्वस्वत्याग exactly
- (B) only the doer is changed, from Panna to Banbir, with the meaning intact
- (C) it overstates the loss, since त्याग actually means a small token gift
- (D) both the TOTALITY (सर्व- = all, not 'some') and the identity of what was given (her dearest, a child's life, not spare wealth) are lost, softening an irreversible supreme renunciation into a partial gift

31. Four claims: (i) the assassin's purpose was to kill the heir; (ii) the prince survived; (iii) Panna's own son died in the prince's place; (iv) Panna died defending the prince. How many are TRUE, and which is the lone false one?

- (A) all four are true
- (B) two are true (i and iv); the prince did not survive
- (C) three are true (i, ii, iii); only (iv) is false, since Panna survived and it was her son who died
- (D) only (i) is true; the rest overstate the story

32. The same single deed is called both 'a mother bereaved' and 'a dynasty preserved'. Why is this not a contradiction?

- (A) they contradict, so exactly one of the two must be false
- (B) they are identical statements, making the pairing merely redundant
- (C) the two phrases describe different aspects of one event — the private cost (her child's death) and its public consequence (the rightful heir kept alive) — so they are complementary, not conflicting
- (D) both phrases secretly refer to Panna's own death, described twice

33. Which set correctly labels the case AND function of all four: छलेन, शयनागारे, राजपुत्रस्य, स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः?

- (A) छलेन = locative, शयनागारे = genitive, राजपुत्रस्य = instrumental, स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः = nominative
- (B) छलेन = instrumental ('by deception'), शयनागारे = locative ('in the bedroom'), राजपुत्रस्य = genitive ('of the prince'), स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः = instrumental plural ('by/in golden letters')

(C) all four are nominative singular forms naming subjects

(D) छलेन = genitive, शयनागारे = instrumental, राजपुत्रस्य = locative, स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः = accusative

34. A composite gloss-check: which option pairs THREE words with all-correct meanings and no slip?

(A) धाया = 'courage', सर्वस्व = 'a small gift', कुतन्त्रम् = 'a good plan'

(B) धाया = 'a queen', सर्वस्व = 'another's wealth', कुतन्त्रम् = 'a bedroom'

(C) धाया = 'foster-nurse', सर्वस्व = 'one's entire own', कुतन्त्रम् = 'an evil scheme'

(D) धाया = 'a prince', सर्वस्व = 'one's life only', कुतन्त्रम् = 'a wet-nurse'

35. A counterfactual: had Panna kept her son and instead hidden the prince elsewhere in the राजगृह, the chapter's specific claim about her would change how?

(A) nothing would change, since saving the prince is the entire point regardless of method

(B) it would make her sacrifice greater, since hiding is riskier than swapping

(C) the prince could not be saved at all without her son in the bed

(D) she might still have saved the prince by concealment, but without surrendering her own son the act would no longer be सर्वस्वत्याग — it would show cleverness and loyalty, not the supreme renunciation the chapter exalts

36. The forms हन्तुम्, अहन्, हनिष्यति, हन्तु derive from the root हन् ('kill'). Match each to its sense; which row is fully correct?

(A) हन्तुम् = 'to kill' (infinitive), अहन् = 'he killed' (past), हनिष्यति = 'he will kill' (future), हन्तु = 'let him kill' (imperative)

(B) हन्तुम् = 'he killed', अहन् = 'to kill', हनिष्यति = 'let him kill', हन्तु = 'he will kill'

(C) हन्तुम् = 'he will kill', अहन् = 'let him kill', हनिष्यति = 'to kill', हन्तु = 'he killed'

(D) all four are infinitives meaning 'to kill', differing only in spelling

37. Why does the chapter's honouring Panna स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः rather than recording Banbir's cleverness reveal its VALUE-scheme, not merely its facts?

(A) golden letters can physically record only the names of kings, so the choice is merely a rule

(B) Banbir's name was simply too long to write in gold, a practical limit

(C) choosing whom to immortalise is an evaluative act: the idiom of golden letters is reserved for the noble and worthy, so applying it to Panna and not the treacherous schemer expresses a judgement that selfless loyalty, not cunning evil, deserves lasting glory

(D) the idiom is neutral and carries no praise, so the choice reflects nothing about values

38. A student says the story 'pits cleverness against cleverness equally.' What is the chapter's actual moral framing of the two minds?

- (A) both minds are praised equally, since each devised a clever plan
- (B) Panna is the foolish one and Banbir the wise one
- (C) neither showed intelligence; the outcome was sheer accident
- (D) Banbir's intelligence is bent to evil (दुष्टबुद्धि) while Panna's is wisdom guided by loyalty; the chapter elevates morally-directed intelligence over cunning serving wickedness, so the two are not praised equally

39. In 'पन्ना स्वपुत्रं राजपुत्रस्य शयनागारे अस्थापयत्', a translator writes 'Panna placed the prince in her son's bedroom.' Which two case errors produce this wrong reading?

- (A) it correctly reads every case; the sentence really does say that
- (B) it mis-takes स्वपुत्रम् (accusative, the one placed = her son) as the location, and reverses राजपुत्रस्य (genitive, whose room = the prince's) into the son's — so both the object and the possessor are swapped
- (C) the only error is reading शयनागारे as instrumental instead of locative
- (D) the only error is that अस्थापयत् should be future, not past

40. Which abstract principle is most directly EXEMPLIFIED — enacted, not merely mentioned — by Panna's deed?

- (A) that cunning deception is reliably rewarded with a throne
- (B) that a hired nurse's wages should equal a mother's love
- (C) that fidelity to a sacred trust can demand surrendering even what one holds most dear
- (D) that the sixteenth century was a peaceful era in Mewar

41. The title-word वीराङ्गना and the closing वीराङ्गनासु bracket the chapter. What rhetorical function does this repetition serve?

- (A) it shows the two words are unrelated, a mere coincidence of sound
- (B) it frames the whole narrative as a demonstration of what वीराङ्गना means — opening with the claim and closing by placing Panna among such women, so the story proves the label it began with
- (C) it signals the chapter is about many heroines, not Panna specifically
- (D) it is a printing error in the title accidentally repeated at the end

42. Consider 'यदि पन्ना स्वपुत्रं न न्यवेशयिष्यत् तर्हि...' ('if Panna had not placed her son, then...'). Which completion is the correct causal consequence?

- (A) ...the assassin would have found and killed the true heir, Mewar would have lost its rightful successor, and Banbir's scheme would have triumphed
- (B) ...her son would still have died, but the prince would also have reigned
- (C) ...the assassin would have spared everyone, since there was no swap
- (D) ...Banbir would have been honoured स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः for his cleverness

43. A test bank near-homophone pair: which option states the contrast the chapter actually relies on, with the right phonetic cue?

- (A) धाया = 'foster-nurse' versus धैर्य = 'patience/steadfastness' — the difference is carried by the vowels आ versus ऐ
- (B) धाया = 'patience' versus धैर्य = 'foster-nurse' — the meanings are simply swapped
- (C) धाया = 'a plot' versus धैर्य = 'a palace' — both name objects
- (D) धाया = 'a queen' versus धैर्य = 'a prince' — both name royalty

44. Why does the chapter make the assassin's SUCCESS at killing 'the boy in the bed' the very proof that the prince was saved?

- (A) because a successful killing always means the plot ultimately failed
- (B) because the boy he killed was the substitute (Panna's son), his successful strike against that decoy is precisely what diverted the lethal blow away from the real heir
- (C) because the assassin's success means the real prince must also have died
- (D) because the assassin actually spared the boy, which is why the prince lived

45. Which inference about Mewar's later history does the chapter LICENSE, versus which is mere speculation beyond it?

- (A) licensed: the exact number of years he reigned; speculation: that he survived at all
- (B) licensed: that the rescued Udai Singh took his rightful place in Mewar's Maharana line; speculation: the particular battles, laws, or length of his reign
- (C) licensed: that he abdicated at once; speculation: that Panna ever existed
- (D) licensed: that Mewar fell soon after; speculation: which century it was

46. If the rival had openly challenged the king in fair combat rather than using छल and a hidden assassin, which TWO descriptors of him would no longer fit?

- (A) both 'wicked' and 'evil-minded', which depend only on open combat
- (B) both 'brave' and 'loyal', which the chapter already applies to him
- (C) both 'royal' and 'foreign', which describe his fighting style
- (D) both 'deceitful' (छल-using) and 'cowardly' (striking by stealth instead of face-to-face) would cease to apply

47. A near-correct summary fails on EXACTLY ONE count: 'In the sixteenth century, the loyal धाया Panna let her son be killed हन्तुम् so the prince might live, and she is honoured स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः.' What is the single slip?

- (A) the slip is the century: it should be the sixth, not the sixteenth
- (B) the slip is धाया: Panna was the prince's birth-mother, not his nurse
- (C) the slip is स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः: golden letters honour only kings, never a nurse
- (D) हन्तुम् is an infinitive of PURPOSE ('to kill', the assassin's aim) and cannot describe the son being killed; the son was the one killed, not a purpose — every other element is correct

48. In 'सः छलेन अगच्छत्' versus 'सः छलम् अकरोत्', what is the precise difference in what each asserts about deception?

- (A) both assert he made a deception; only the verb of motion differs
- (B) the first says he made deception and the second says he came by it — the reverse
- (C) the first uses छलेन (instrumental) to say he came BY MEANS OF deception — deceit was his manner; the second uses छलम् (accusative) to say he MADE a deception — deceit was the thing he did
- (D) neither sentence concerns deception; both are about open combat

49. Why might Panna's deed be said to reflect her CHARACTER more than her CIRCUMSTANCES, and what textual cue supports this?

- (A) the chapter says luck alone saved the prince, so character is irrelevant
- (B) she had no choice whatsoever, so only circumstance can be credited
- (C) the golden-letters praise is aimed at the assassin's circumstance, not at Panna
- (D) though circumstances forced a dreadful choice, the lasting honour स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः is bestowed for the choice she made — the harder, loyal one — so the praise targets her chosen character, not the luck of the situation

50. Pull everything together: which single statement is fully consistent with the chapter's FACTS, GRAMMAR, and MORAL framing at once?

- (A) In षष्ठे शतके the मूर्ख Banbir अहन् (infinitive) the prince, so Panna gave up her own life and her name is forgotten
- (B) In the sixteenth century Panna the queen ruled, slew Banbir by छल, and Chandan crowned himself
- (C) In षोडशे शतके the दुष्टबुद्धि Banbir sent an assassin हन्तुम् (to kill) the heir Udai Singh; the loyal धाया Panna's सर्वस्वत्याग — her son Chandan's life — saved the future king, so her name stands वीराङ्गनासु, written स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः
- (D) Banbir honestly challenged Panna in open combat, whose wealth-त्याग saved Chandan, and the assassin is honoured स्वर्णिमाक्षरैः

51. A student treats 'sixteen' and 'sixteenth' as one word in Sanskrit. Which pairing of cardinal and ordinal-locative is correct for the chapter's date?

- (A) 'sixteen' is षोडशे and 'in the sixteenth' is षोडश
- (B) the cardinal 'sixteen' is षोडश, while 'in the sixteenth (century)' is षोडशे — an ordinal in the locative agreeing with शतके
- (C) both 'sixteen' and 'in the sixteenth' are षष्ठे
- (D) 'sixteen' is षष्टिः and 'in the sixteenth' is षोडश शतकम्

52. Why does the chapter's logic make Chandan's death and Udai Singh's survival INSEPARABLE rather than two unrelated facts?

- (A) they are the two halves of one swap: Chandan died precisely BECAUSE he occupied the prince's bed in Udai Singh's place, so the one death is the very mechanism of the other's survival
- (B) they are unrelated; Chandan died of illness while the prince happened to survive elsewhere

(C) they are inseparable only because both boys were the same age

(D) they are inseparable because the assassin killed both and the chapter counts them together

53. A grammarian asks which ONE of these forms could correctly fill 'हन्ता बालकं ____ राजगृहम् अगच्छत्' to mean 'the assassin went to the palace TO KILL the boy.'

(A) अहन् — the past 'he killed', which would assert the deed was already done

(B) हनिष्यति — the future 'he will kill', a finite verb that cannot serve as the purpose-phrase here

(C) हन्तु — the imperative 'let him kill', a command, not a purpose

(D) हन्तुम् — the infinitive of purpose, expressing why he went

54. Which reasoning correctly explains why सर्वस्वत्याग, not merely त्याग, is the precise word for Panna's act?

(A) त्याग alone means giving-up of something, but the सर्वस्व- prefix specifies that what was given was her ENTIRE dearest possession — so only the compound captures the totality, a partial त्याग would understate the loss

(B) त्याग alone already means giving up everything, so सर्वस्व- is merely decorative

(C) सर्वस्व- means 'a little', so the compound actually names a smaller loss than त्याग

(D) त्याग means receiving, and सर्वस्व- corrects it to mean giving — the prefix flips the verb

55. Re-rank the three figures by the GRAVITY of what each loses, greatest to least, as the chapter frames it: Panna, Chandan, Udai Singh.

(A) Udai Singh loses the most (his throne), Panna next, Chandan least

(B) Chandan loses the most — his very life; Panna next — her dearest child and a lifetime of grief, though she lives; Udai Singh loses nothing, being the one saved

(C) Panna loses the most (her own life), Chandan next, Udai Singh least

(D) all three lose equally, since all three were targets of the plot

56. A philosophy student argues 'an act done partly from affection cannot count as pure sacrifice.' What response best preserves the chapter's claim while granting the truth in the objection?

(A) the student is simply right; the chapter never mentions duty at all

(B) affection for the prince surely existed, yet love alone could never demand killing one's OWN child; the decisive factor that explains choosing the prince's life is loyalty to her entrusted duty, so the deed is sacrifice driven by निष्ठा, not mere fondness

(C) love and duty are identical, so the objection dissolves into nonsense

(D) neither love nor duty mattered, since the king coerced her into it

57. Why is it MORE precise to call Panna's act 'redirecting an intended murder' than 'preventing a murder'?

- (A) she did not stop a killing from occurring at all — a killing still happened — she shifted its target from the prince to her own son, so 'redirecting' captures that a death occurred but fell elsewhere, whereas 'preventing' falsely implies no one died
- (B) they mean the same, since in both cases the prince survives
- (C) 'preventing' is more precise, because in truth no one was killed
- (D) 'redirecting' is wrong, because she physically fought the assassin off

58. Which statement about the word वीराङ्गना draws ONLY inferences the term justifies, rejecting those it does not?

- (A) justified: that she ruled a kingdom; not justified: that she was brave
- (B) justified: that the author judges Panna courageous and worthy of a hero's honour, and that she is a woman; not justified: that she literally fought in war or ruled as queen
- (C) justified: that she was a male soldier; not justified: that she was a woman
- (D) justified: that she was foolish; not justified: that she was loyal

59. Finally, a maximally compressed claim: 'Panna's सर्वस्वत्याग was her own life, given छलेन in षष्ठे शतके to slay Banbir.' Exactly how many independent errors does it contain?

- (A) one error only: the century should be षोडशे, everything else is correct
- (B) two errors: the century and the identity of the slain, nothing more
- (C) no errors: the claim is a faithful one-line summary of the chapter
- (D) four: her सर्वस्व given was her son's life not her own; she used no छल (deception is the rival's trait); the century was षोडशे (sixteenth) not षष्ठे (sixth); and she did not slay Banbir at all

60. The infinitive हन्तुम् in 'सः बालकं हन्तुम् आगच्छत्' shares its object बालकम् with the finite verb आगच्छत्. Which account of how the object is governed is correct?

- (A) बालकम् is the object of आगच्छत्, meaning 'he came to the boy', and हन्तुम् stands without any object
- (B) बालकम् is the subject of हन्तुम्, so the boy is the one doing the killing
- (C) बालकम् is in the accusative only by accident and could equally be nominative बालकः
- (D) बालकम् is the accusative object of the action named by the infinitive हन्तुम् ('to kill'), not of the verb of motion आगच्छत् ('came') — one comes to a place, but one kills the boy, so the accusative belongs to the purpose-verb

Worked Solutions

- (B) The compound transfers a warrior's valour-word onto a caretaker because heroism is gauged by the weight of the loss accepted, not by carrying arms; the other readings either reduce it to physical strength, empty out वीर-, or substitute beauty for courage.
- (A) Swapping a doll for the son preserves the misdirection that saves the heir but removes the irreplaceable loss of a life, so the deed would shrink from total renunciation to mere trickery; the option claiming nothing changes ignores that the chapter's praise rests on the cost, not the rescue alone.
- (D) धात्री explains धाया as the same thing; प्रसूता is a contrasting role (one who bore the child); धैर्य merely sounds similar but means steadfastness — collapsing these three distinct relations into one 'opposite' is the slip, and the other options invent false meanings.
- (D) The -एन ending marks instrument and the -तुम् form is a purpose-infinitive depending on 'wished'; the sentence thus reports an intention and its means, never a completed act, so the option asserting a finished killing reverses both labels.

- 5. (A) The wicked scheme must arise first, prompting Panna's pre-emptive swap; only then can the strike fall on the substitute, which alone leaves the true heir alive to reign — placing the strike before the swap or the reign before the strike breaks causation.
- 6. (B) A determinative compound takes the gender of its final member, here the feminine अङ्गना ('woman'), so वीराङ्गना is feminine regardless of masculine वीर-; the claim that the first member fixes gender is the misconception.
- 7. (A) Success is defined by an act done, not by the intended identity; the blow landed on the substitute, so a completed killing and the prince's survival are perfectly compatible — the resolution the chapter's misdirection supplies.
- 8. (B) अमास्यत् is a finite past verb reporting the deed done, while हन्तुम् is a purpose-infinitive stating the aim of the coming; only the first commits to an actual death, so the option reversing them, and the one denying any killing-verb, both fail.
- 9. (C) The -ः ending marks the means of recording, keeping Panna's name as what is honoured and the letters as the instrument; reading it as nominative flips subject and tool, which is the precise grammatical fault to avoid.
- 10. (A) Sacrifice is measured by what is surrendered, and fulfilling a duty that exacts one's dearest possession is the height of it, not its negation; the claims that duty makes the cost nil, or that only whim could ennoble it, both misread the chapter's praise.
- 11. (A) Each nominative is its clause's doer and each accusative its undergoer: Banbir makes the plot, Panna places her son, the assassin strikes the boy — the options swapping these roles or merging all under one agent misread the case endings.
- 12. (C) The deed's force comes from loyalty unaided by blood-instinct; if Udai Singh were her own son the rescue could be ascribed to maternal instinct, diluting the demonstration of निष्ठा — so the धाया framing intensifies, and the 'strengthen' and 'no change' readings miss this.
- 13. (A) षष्टितम is the ordinal of sixty ('sixtieth'), unrelated to षोडश ('sixteen'); the chapter's century is the sixteenth, so the writer errs both in the number-word chosen and in the value it denotes — the options treating षष्टितम as 'sixteenth' are wrong.
- 14. (B) Survival means the cost did not end in a moment of death but extended into a lifetime of mourning, deepening the sacrifice; the readings that survival nullifies the risk, brings a crown, or proves the plot failed all contradict the chapter.
- 15. (C) The postposition कृते with a genitive expresses benefactive 'for the sake of', and अत्यजत् is a completed past act of renouncing; the boy is Panna's son (पन्नायाः पुत्रः), so the readings making it agency, future, or the prince's own son all misparse the case relations.

- 16. (C) Replacing one purpose-infinitive with another keeps the syntactic frame and reverses only the goal, showing -तुम् marks purpose independent of the root's meaning; the alternatives wrongly assign tense, ungrammaticality, or subjecthood to the form.
- 17. (C) Banbir's aim is reversed by the swap, Panna's loyal aim costs Chandan his life, and the passive infant Udai Singh gains everything he never sought — the rows crediting Banbir with the throne, Panna with reward, or merging all intentions misread the relationship-web.
- 18. (D) The clause explicitly says she did not fight (न अयुध्यत) and instead neutralised the deception, i.e. by substitution rather than force; the sword-fight, bribe, and treasury readings all import actions the text denies.
- 19. (D) Only the first keeps every fact and label right: सप्तमी locative for the century, an infinitive for the purpose, the son (not Panna) as the one killed, the prince's survival, and instrumental golden letters; each distractor breaks the date, a tense label, a case, or the facts.
- 20. (C) Deceit underlies the wicked scheme on the rival's side, while loyalty flowers into total renunciation on Panna's — a clean vice-to-virtue layering; the options that cross-assign सर्वस्वत्याग or निष्ठा to the wrong person scramble the moral map.
- 21. (B) Centuries are numbered one ahead of their leading digits, so the sixteenth covers 1501–1600; the peer commits the standard off-by-one slip of reading the ordinal as the boundary year 1600.
- 22. (A) A passive recasting moves the doer into the instrumental (बनवीरेण) and makes the former object the subject-patient, keeping the intention's direction intact; the distractors reverse agent and patient or replace the event entirely.
- 23. (A) History asserts that its persons, places and times exist outside the text, so they invite verification rather than the free invention of fable — the readings that flatten the genres, discard the moral, or universally doubt the names all miss this.
- 24. (C) The element -आगार denotes a room/store and combines with the activity housed there; 'food/eating' (भोजन) yields a dining-hall, just as 'sleeping' yields a bedroom — building it on a number, a person, or an infinitive gives nonsense.
- 25. (A) An effective scheme evidences cunning, so the fault lies in a corrupt will (दुष्टबुद्धि), not a weak intellect (मूर्ख); treating them as synonyms, or preferring मूर्ख, wrongly converts moral evil into a lapse of cleverness.
- 26. (D) पूज्यते (yak-passive) takes its agent in the instrumental (सर्वैः) and is present-ongoing, while -सु places Panna among the heroines; the options making सर्वैः nominative, the verb past, or वीराङ्गनासु the agent all misread the endings.

27. (D) Necessity to a chain of events is not virtue; the text honours moral worth, on which an instrument of murder scores nothing — the readings crediting him with hidden loyalty, the renunciation, or mere causation all confuse plot-function with merit.

28. (B) Sleeping is something only a living person does, so ascribing it to राजगृह (a building) is the place-as-person confusion; entering a place, a prince sleeping, and a prince being a target are all correctly matched.

29. (C) Facts, not beliefs, fix who died; the assassin's error about the boy's identity leaves the real outcome unchanged — the prince lives, the son does not — so the readings invoking magic belief, a knowing mercy, or a hidden death are all false.

30. (D) सर्व- demands all, and त्याग is renunciation of one's everything — here a life — so 'some wealth' shrinks both the scope and the substance of the loss; the claim that nothing is lost or that त्याग means a token both contradict the gloss.

31. (C) The aim to kill the heir, the prince's survival, and the son's death in the bed are all confirmed; the trap (iv) attributes the death to Panna herself, which the chapter denies — she lived on to grieve.

32. (C) One act can carry a personal loss and a public benefit simultaneously; naming each aspect is complementary, not contradictory, and neither concerns Panna's own death — so the 'contradiction', 'redundant', and 'her own death' readings all fail.

33. (B) The endings -एन and -ैः mark instrument, -ए marks locative singular, and -स्य marks possession; only the first option matches each ending to its true case-function, while the others scramble or flatten them.

34. (C) धाया is the foster-nurse (not courage — that is धैर्य), सर्वस्व is all one holds (not a small or another's portion), and कुतन्त्रम् is an evil scheme (कु- = bad); only the first triple is wholly correct.

35. (D) Concealment could in principle rescue the heir, but it removes the irreplaceable loss that defines सर्वस्वत्याग, downgrading the deed from supreme renunciation to mere stratagem — so 'nothing changes', 'greater sacrifice', and 'impossible' all misread the act's essence.

36. (A) The -तुम् infinitive is हन्तुम्, the augmented past अहन्, the -ष्य- future हनिष्यति, and the -तु imperative हन्तु; only the first row assigns each its true sense, the others permute or flatten the forms.

37. (C) Reserving the honour-idiom for the worthy and withholding it from the schemer encodes a value-judgement about who merits remembrance; the explanations by royal-only rule, name-length, or a value-neutral idiom all empty the choice of its moral force.

38. (D) The text marks Banbir's mind as corrupt and Panna's as loyal wisdom, ranking virtue-guided intelligence above cunning evil; the 'equal praise', reversed-roles, and 'pure accident' readings all flatten this moral hierarchy.

39. (B) स्वपुत्रम् is the accusative object actually placed and राजपुत्रस्य the genitive owner of the room, so the faithful reading is 'her own son in the prince's bedroom'; the wrong version swaps who is placed and whose room it is — two case errors, not a tense or instrumental slip.

40. (C) Her act dramatises loyalty exacting the dearest possible cost — the principle the story embodies rather than states; reward-for-deception is the rival's failed assumption, and the wage and peaceful-era claims are unrelated to the deed's lesson.

41. (B) Bookending with the label and its locative-plural echo makes the narrative an argument for the title-claim, ranking Panna among heroines at the close; the coincidence, many-women, and misprint readings all miss the deliberate frame.

42. (A) Without the decoy, the strike falls on the actual prince, ending the line and handing victory to the plot — exactly the catastrophe the swap averted; the alternatives wrongly keep the prince reigning, have the assassin relent, or reward Banbir.

43. (A) धाया is the nurse and धैर्य is steadfastness, the whole semantic gap riding on the आ/ऐ vowel contrast; the swapped-meanings and invented object/royalty glosses misidentify both words.

44. (B) Success against the decoy IS the misdirection: the blow landing on Panna's son is what kept it off the prince; the readings that success means failure, that the prince also died, or that the boy was spared all break the logic of the swap.

45. (B) The text supports that the saved heir continued the lineage but says nothing of specific reign details; the options treating his survival, Panna's existence, or the century as speculation contradict what the chapter actually states.

46. (D) Open combat would remove the trickery and the stealth that make him deceitful and cowardly; his deeper moral wickedness would remain, and the chapter never calls him brave, loyal, royal, or foreign in this sense.

47. (D) Date, role, survival, the son's death, and the honour are all right; the lone fault is grammatical — an infinitive of purpose is misapplied to the act of the son being killed, which would need a finite passive, not हन्तुम्.

48. (C) छलेन is instrumental (deception as the means of coming), while छलम् is the accusative object of अकरोत् (deception as the thing made); the readings that reverse them or deny deception altogether misparse the two endings.

49. (D) Circumstance set the dilemma but honour is awarded for the decision within it, signalled by the golden-letters tribute to her; the options crediting luck, denying any choice, or redirecting the praise to the assassin all contradict the text.

50. (C) Only the first is right throughout: the correct century, the moral fault दुष्ट (not मूर्ख), the purpose-infinitive हन्तुम्, the true sacrifice (Chandan's life, not Panna's own), the heir's survival, and the honour among heroines in golden letters; each distractor breaks a date, a label, a gloss, or the facts.

51. (B) षोडश is the plain count, and the locative ordinal षोडशे agrees with शतके for 'in the sixteenth century'; the options swapping cardinal and ordinal, using षष्ठे ('sixth'), or षष्टि: ('sixty') all confuse the number-words.

52. (A) The substitution links the two outcomes causally — Chandan's death in the royal bed is what diverted the blow and kept Udai Singh alive; the illness, same-age, and 'both killed' readings sever or misstate that causal link.

53. (D) Only the -तुम् infinitive हन्तुम् supplies the purpose of going; the past अहन्, future हनिष्यति, and imperative हन्तु are finite verbs reporting, predicting, or commanding the act, not stating the aim of the journey.

54. (A) त्याग is renunciation in general; सर्वस्व ('all one's own') pins it to the totality of her dearest — her son's life — which a bare त्याग would not convey; the prefix is not decorative, does not mean 'a little', and त्याग does not mean receiving.

55. (B) Chandan pays with his life, the ultimate loss; Panna surrenders her dearest yet survives to grieve; Udai Singh is precisely preserved — so the orderings that kill Panna, demote Chandan, or flatten the costs misread the chapter.

56. (B) Granting affection, the response shows that love by itself cannot justify sacrificing one's own child, so loyalty to duty is the necessary added motive the chapter foregrounds; the 'no duty', 'identical', and 'coerced' readings each erase the chapter's actual claim.

57. (A) A death did occur — Chandan's — so 'prevented a murder' is inaccurate; 'redirected' rightly conveys that the lethal act happened but landed on the substitute, and she used substitution, not combat, to achieve it.

58. (B) वीर + अङ्गना licenses 'brave woman' — courage and womanhood — but says nothing of literal warfare or rule; the options crediting kingship, denying her womanhood, or inferring foolishness all read beyond or against the compound.

59. (D) The sentence misstates the thing sacrificed (son's life, not her own), wrongly assigns deception to Panna, gives the wrong century, and invents a slaying of Banbir — four distinct faults, so the one-, two-, and zero-error counts all undercount.

60. (D) The boy is what is killed, so बालकम् is the object of हन्तुम्, while आगच्छत् ('came') governs no person-object; making it the object of 'came', the subject of 'kill', or an interchangeable nominative all misassign the case relation.
